Roosevelt Meets 50 Industrial Leaders On Recession Today

President Reports Congress In Conferences on U. S. Economic Problems; All Phases of Current Slump To Be Considered During Business Parley at White House.

WASHINGTON—(AP)—President Roosevelt, reporting progress in his conferences on economic problems, called together today the 50 members of Secretary Roper's business advisory council—the largest group he has met.

The chief executive told reporters he would talk on any subject the council wished to take up at the late afternoon gathering.

It generally was expected the group would consider broadly all phases of the recession, although the top ranking industrialists who belong to the council gave no advance indication.

There has been some talk of appointing a council committee to discuss industrial stabilization with labor leaders and other interested persons.

The council, headed by W. Averell Harriman of the Union Pacific railroad, has been active since 1933. Its report on economic matters seldom have been made public, but informed persons have credited these surveys with having considerable influence on administration policies.

Asked About Holding Firms.

Mr. Roosevelt answered several economic inquiries at his press conference yesterday, but he declined to elaborate on his statement of last week that he favored the abolition of all holding companies.

After he was told that the securities commission had declared there were all kinds of holding companies, the president was asked whether he had in mind all of them or specified types.

He replied that it would be difficult to give a definition which would cover all fields. As soon as a definition was given, he added, some persons would try to put certain companies in the holding company category while others would endeavor to keep other companies out.

Mr. Roosevelt said he was getting along well in his series of meeting with business men. Utility managers were the first on the list, having talked with the president about the government's power policy and the possibility of expanded utility construction. He held two others in the past week.

Friday, the president will confer with several leading automobile manufacturers and the heads of several auto finance companies on the possibility of stabilizing auto production.

GIVE UP FIGHT

Senators Abandon Hope For Lynch Bill Showdown.

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Senate leaders, resigning themselves to further delay of the administration legislative program, abondoned hope today of an immediate showdown on the anti-lynching bill.

The controversial measure has drawn a steady, 12-day flow of opposition oratory from southern senators, blocking senate consideration of the government reorganization bill and other Roosevelt proposals.

Administration lieutenants had talked of wearing down the speakers by holding night sessions, but Democratic Leader Barkley announced none would be ordered this week.

Senator Clark (D-Mo) said, however, he would start demanding strict enforcement of senate debate rules. A rule provides that no senator may speak more than twice on the same subject on any legislative day.

'Brain Trust' Chief Takes Seat of New Jersey Governor.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—(AP)—Quiet and serious John Milton, chief of the legal "brain trust" of Mayor Frank Hague's Democratic organization for three decades, prepared today to assume a seat in the United States senate next week.

He was appointed by Gov. A Harry Moore, who quit the senate to start an unprecedented third term as governor.

ALTON, Ill. — (AP) — Fourteen-year-old Margery Edwards cuddled a six-pound, six-ounce baby girl today, born by a caesarian operation.

CLEVELAND—(AP)—The Pere Marquette railroad had a new president today, the directors having elected George D. Brooke, president also of the parent Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, to succeed the late W. J. Harahan.

GIRL, 4, SEES MOTHER SLAIN

Akron Truck Driver Jailed In Murder Which Followed 'Illicit Love Affair.'

AKRON —(AP)— Robert Snow, unemployed truck driver, confessed today, Assistant County Prosecutor Robert Azar said, that he shot and killed Mrs. Harriet Deger, 25, as her four-year-old daughter, Margaret Ann, clutched her hand.

Deputy Police Inspector Dennies Murray booked Snow, 27 years old, on a first degree murder charge.

Murray said the slaying climaxed an "illicit love affair."

Mrs. Deger, wife of an Akron rubber worker, emerged with her daughter last night from the home of her sister, Mrs. Betty Bosnyak, when Snow stepped from his parked automobile and commanded, "Come here, you, I want to talk to you."

Mrs. Bosnyak told police Snow grasped Mrs. Deger's hand and pulled her a few steps. The mother, holding her daughter by the hand, dragged the child with her.

After a brief exange of words, Mrs. Bosnyak said, Snow pressed a revolver against Mrs. Deger's left breast and fired twice. The woman slumped to the sidewalk, pulling the child with her.

Detectives seized Snow later as he approached his mother's home, where he lived. They found a .38 calibre revolver concealed in a clump of bushes nearby.

"I got her. I intended to get her ever since Christmas eve," Azar quoted Snow as saying.

DENIES 'OFFER' IN BELL CASE

Bell President Says no Settlement Submitted in Refund.

CLEVELAND— (AP)—President Randolph Eide of the Ohio Bell telephone company denied today reports from usually reliable sources of a $7,100,000 settlement offer of the utility's long-litigated $16,000,000 rate case.

"The company has made no offer of settlement as it has felt all along that when principles are agreed upon, if they are, it is the (Ohio utilities) commission's function, as required by law, to study further the evidence and testimony in the case and issue an order accordingly," he said.

The case involves refunds of alleged excess profits.

G-MEN, ARMED WITH DIGGING TOOLS, LEAVE

SUSPECT STAYS IN JAIL

Possible Link With Mattson Case Seen In Mysterious Movements By Hoover.

ST. PAUL, Minn.—(UP)—G-men resumed their mysterious activities in the Charles S. Ross kidnap-murder case today when they slipped out of their headquarters carrying large boxes.

The boxes were large enough to contain digging implements and it was believed they were starting a search for the body of Ross, who was kidnaped and slain by Peter Anders.

Anders has confessed to J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that he killed Ross and his kidnap accomplice, Atwood Gray, after collecting $50,000 ransom from Ross' family near Rockford, Ill.

Use Rear Exit.

It was not known immediately whether Hoover was one of the agents who left the building by two elevators and a rear exit and piled into automobiles.

Anders apparently remained in county jail, where he spent the night after arriving by chartered airliner with Hoover last night.

Hoover, a special squad of his men, and, presumably, their prisoner were here after a strange airplane flight from Los Angeles where Anders was arrested and confessed. St. Paul is more than 300 miles off the direct air line from Los Angeles to Chicago, the scene of Anders' known crime, but is on the northern air line from Tacoma, Wash., to Chicago. Tacoma was the scene of the kidnap-murder of 10-year-old Charles Mattson, which, now that the Ross case is solved, is the one remaining unsolved kidnaping.

On the basis of known facts, there was no rational explanation for Hoover's activities, and it was presumed that he made public only a part of his case when he

CHICAGO — (AP) — The Purple Parrot, campus humor magazine, was barred today from distribution among Northwestern university students until a two-page supplement of pictures showing co-eds in their baths had been deleted.

The issue, which was to have appeared tomorrow, was held up by university officials when they discovered that sorority girls had been supplied with candid cameras and had photographed unsuspecting co-es while they were taking baths.

Editor Kyle R. Morris explained the girl photographers were told to take pictures of co-eds who were concealed as much as possible by soap bubbles.

QUIZZED IN WIFE SLAYING

YOUNGSTOWN — (U.P.) — Patsy Mucci, 63, was questioned by police today in connection with the fatal stabbing of his 62-year-old wife in their home.

City-wide Inoculation To Prevent Diphtheria Urged

Inoculation against diphtheria for all children in Mansfield was urged today by Dr. Roy C. Rehder, city health commissioner, following the isolation of patients at General hospital, one ill with the disease and the other a "carrier."

From more than 60 throat cultures have been taken at the hospital, Dr. Rehder said today it had been found that a young woman who came to the hospital with a streptococcic throat condition, and who was one of those quarantined last week.

Cultures from her throat disclosed the fact that she does not have diphtheria herself, but is carrying the germs. She will be kept in isolation until the germs can be killed.

Clarence Feeman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Feeman, is the only diphtheria victim in the hospital at the present time, according to the health commissioner. He pointed out that few Mansfield parents have their children inoculated against diseases until there is fear of an epidemic and that time may be too late.

"All children should be inoculated against diphtheria and smallpox", he said today "Children under ten years are particularly susceptible to diphtheria, and while inoculation is not 100 per cent proof against the disease, it is the best known method of prevention. There are so few inoculations against it in Mansfield that a few persons carrying the germs might possibly start an epidemic, even before the first case can be detected."

The private pavilion at General hospital was under quarantine for several days last week while Dr. Rehder attempted to locate the source of the germs. The Feeman child was believed to have been suffering from a streptococcic throat when brought to the hospital. A throat culture before admittance failed to show diphtheria germs.

Shown above is Peter Anders, confessed kidnap-slayer of Charles S. Ross, wealthy Chicagoan, who is in jail at St. Paul, Minn., today following a mysterious airplane trip from St. Anita, Cal., where he was arrested by federal agents. Federal agents declined to explain the halt at St. Paul while they were enroute to Chicago to bring Anders to trial. Some observers believed the stop was made to permit agents to renew an investigation of the kidnap-slaying of 10-year-old Charles Matson, of Tacoma, Wash. Tacoma is on the northern air route to Chicago.

Bates Opens School To Teach Police FBI Tactics

First Sessions to Be Held Tomorrow—Teachers From Outside to Be Brought In, Says Chief.

All members of the Mansfield police force will begin to "burn the candle at both ends" tomorrow when school hours and study and lecture classes are added to their regular police duties.

Starting tomorrow Chief Meade K. Bates will conduct two classes in the fundamentals and modern sciences of crime detection and law enforcement, as they are being taught at the F. B. I. school, department of justice, which Bates attended in Washington last summer and fall.

The first class is scheduled for 1 p. m. for second shift officers and men, with the second class at 7 p. m. for first and third shifts. Classes will be held at least one day each week, and two days whenever it is possible. Outside lecturers will be brought in from time to time, Bates said.

Newest In Crime Detection.

The subjects to be studied would amaze the "coppers" of 15 years ago who, when they started to work on the force were given night sticks, and a gun that was just as likely to shoot curves as not.

The Mansfield police students will study the science of crime detection which includes chemistry, blood tests and such impressive lessons as "microspectroscopic tests." They will be initiated into the intricacies of federal laws on kidnaping, court procedure, and the admissability of evidence in court.

The science of fingerprinting is something more than sprinkling powder on prints, they will learn; and there is a scientific means of restoring destroyed numbers on metal. A crime may be solved with no more than a hair or a strand of fibre as evidence—but you gotta know how. Codes and cryptogram communications will be studied. Typewritten messages and bullets leave a tell-tale story behind them as plainly incriminating as handwriting—but again, the officer must know how to gather such evidence and analyze it.

There is, believe it or not, a certain deftness required in conducting a raid or approaching a bandit car. Arresting a fleeing bandit—especially in a crowd—isn't so easy as it sounds.

And if an officer should find it his painful duty to "frisk" a lady who was known to be carrying a gun, how would he do it? If there is time to find a matron to conduct the search, it's easy, but if not—well, that's something else an officer must be very decisive about when the time comes.

It took Chief Bates three months, working 16 hours a day and frequently on Sunday, to learn what the F. B. I. school teaches law enforcement officers, and he's determined to present most of this knowledge to his men—even if it takes from now on.

Self-Torture Victim Gives Up As They Repeat Prayer.

CADIZ—(AP)—Raymond Noon, 37-year-old coal miner, was in a Massillon institution today after plunging his right hand into a bed of red-hot coals and defying sheriff's deputies with a hot poker.

Sheriff Elmo Mattern said he and the other officers broke into Noon's home last night and subdued him only after they consented to repeat the Lord's Prayer.

He quoted Noon as saying he plunged his hand into the coals to prove "the power of mind over matter," Mattern said that Noon, who earlier in the evening had attended a religious revival and had been ejected for creating a disturbance, apparently felt no pain but physicians said the hand probably would have to be amputated.

PRINCETON, N. J.—(AP)—Fumitaka Konoye, Princeton university student and son of Japan's premier, says he doubts in some instances "the sincerity of Japan's policy of self-defense" in China.

"I question whether Japan had to go to some of the extremes that she has in the present conflict with China," he told the Princeton council of the Knights of Columbus last night.

BEGINS CHECK OF UNGUARDED RAIL CROSSING

City Takes First Steps In Move to Get Flashers at Bowman Street.

COVERS 24-HOUR PERIOD

Figures on B. & O. Grade Asked By Utilities Commission as Result of City Protest.

First steps in the city's request for the installation of flasher signals at the Bowman street crossing of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad were taken today as a check of the traffic at this point got under way.

The survey, which will cover a 24-hour period, will be made by three men working in eight-hour shifts. It was ordered by Mayor Claude M. Hunter after he conferred yesterday with W. E. Harrington, "trouble shooter" for the state utilities commission, and he asked for figures on the amount of traffic using this crossing daily.

Follows Protest.

Harrington came to Mansfield after Service-Safety Director Tracy C. Styert wrote the commission last week and asked that it force the B. & O. to install signals at the crossing. The protest against the unguarded grade followed a recent accident in which J. F. Uhlich, veteran Mansfield baker, was killed when his car was struck by a train.

A count will be made of all passenger autos, trucks and buses, and pedestrians that cross the unprotected track during the 24-hour period from 8 a. m. today until 8 a. m. tomorrow.

State To Get Figures.

Harrington will receive the report when he returns to the city tomorrow. The figures will be submitted to the utilities commission.

Hunter said he would point out that traffic this week is at an unusually low over the Bowman street crossing, due to the fact that the Empire Steel plant is not operating at present; and that the street is the most congested of any in the city when there is a circus in Mansfield and during the week of county fair.

FOOD SCHOOL CROWD SOARS

Dramatized Trial Highlight of Second Session of Gasco Institute; 1,300 Attend.

More than 1,300 Mansfield housewives, a crowd that overflowed into the balcony of the Ohio theater, attended the second session of the Gasco Food Institute this morning at the theater.

The three-day school which opened yesterday morning with 1,100 women in attendance is being staged by the Ohio Fuel Gas company in co-operation with the News-Journal.

This morning a trial was dramatized in which various demonstrations involving the preparation of foods were given by Miss Katherine Thiele, food lecturer who is in charge of the school, and Miss Pauline Schofield, home service representative of the gas company here.

Miss Thiele took the part of the attorney for the defendant, a Tappan gas range; Miss Schofield played the part of the attorney for the plaintiff, an Electrolux gas refrigerator. Ronald Lowe, institute manager, acted as judge, and the audience was the jury.

The specially constructed model all-gas kitchen, set up on the theater stage for the school, was the setting for the novel trial, and the demonstrations.

"Art Enters the Kitchen" will be the theme for the final day of the school tomorrow.

END FLIGHT

U. S. Navy Bombers Complete Greatest Mass Journey.

HONOLULU — (AP) — Eighteen big navy bombing planes from California swooped down through bright tropical moonlight into the glare of spotlights before dawn today and alighted on Pearl Harbor, completing the greatest mass flight in aviation history in record breaking time.

The first plane touched the water at 8:48 a. m. (EST) just 20 hours and 12 minutes after the "official takeoff" time from San Diego, Calif.

The unofficial flight time bettered the previous naval mark of 21 hours, 25 minutes, set by a squadron of 12 planes in another "routine transfer" from San Diego nine months ago.

150 Honor Shultz, Railroader For Half Century, at Dinner

He was just "Charlie" Shultz to more than 150 of his friends and officials of the Pennsylvania railroad who was honored last night for 52 years of service with the railroad.

And when it was all over after nearly four hours of speech-making and singing, he said a steady "Thank you, fellows," and invited all of them to help him celebrate his 80th birthday on April 2, 1948. The "thank you" was for the word tributes and a Gladstone bag which his associates gave him.

Shultz, who started his railroading as a messenger boy at Crestline in 1885, retired Dec 31 as freight agent.

The dinner in his honor last night was at the Mansfield-Leland hotel ballroom where Pennsylvania railroad officials from as far east as Pittsburgh and Mansfield civic and industrial leaders paid him tribute.

During the proceedings Shultz sat beside his son Leo, who is also a railroader.

Among the dozen or more tributes paid the veteran last night was one by Mayor Claude M. Hunter, a long-time friend of Shultz.

"It is needless to pay a word tribute to 'Charlie' when we have an assembly of men of this caliber here tonight," Hunter said. "That is proof enough of the high regard his friends and associates have for him. I have served with him in council and my association with him has always been pleasant and profitable."

JURY LISTENS TO INMATES AT REFORMATORY

Two Prisoners Whose Parents Conferred With Parole 'Broker' In Group.

GETS PREVIOUS EVIDENCE

Former O. S. R. Guard and Ex-State Employe to Follow On Witness Stand.

The special Richland county grand jury seeking evidence of parole system irregularities, today was scheduled to establish its first contact with the purported "buying" of paroles.

It had before it some of the evidence developed by the Franklin county (Columbus) grand jury and contained in its partial report to the effect that parents of two Mansfield reformatory inmates had conferred with Arch W. (Stub) Naylor, Zanesville, alleged to have been a parole "broker," and was expected to hear testimony of those two inmates during its session either today or tomorrow.

Inmates First on Stand.

The two inmates in question were only part of a group of inmates who were to be called today. Assistant Attorney General George Hurley, in charge of the Richland county investigation, also had summoned C. O. Bish, former reformatory guard, now a Richland county dairyman, and Leo M. Corbett, Mansfield, who was assistant state purchasing agent during the administration of former Governor George White.

Bish and Corbett were expected to testify this afternoon, but Hurley would not comment on what he expected to develop from their testimony.

Inmates were the first to be called when the jury went into its second day's session at the reformatory.

They were brought into the grand jury room from the institution proper, and it could not be learned how many had been heard during the morning.

Just before the jury recessed at noon, Chief Clerk Ben Owen was called in. He was in the jury room only a few minutes, and was questioned, it was believed, about reformatory records.

Approved for Parole.

The two inmates, one of whose parents testified in Columbus to conferring with Naylor concerning the possibility of buying paroles for her son, were Clyde Harouff, 24, of Akron, and Naceb Simon, Youngstown. Harouff, reformatory records show, has already been approved for parole, and is scheduled to leave the institution July 1.

Records also show that he has been assessed 840 days of extra

Gifts Pile Up For Egyptian King and His Queen-To-Be

CAIRO—(AP)—Ancient Egypt and her friends throughout the world poured gifts today at the feet of King Farouk and pretty Farida Zulficar, who will become Egypt's queen tomorrow.

A camel caravan brought picturesque caskets filled with henna for Farida, who will not see the wedding ceremony herself, and may have to wear in public the traditional veil of Egyptian women.

Slender, dark-eyed, 16-year-old Farida decided not to use the henna, which was sent by a notable Egyptian family and which since the days of the Pharoahs has been used to stain the hands and feet of brides.

Cairo business was at a standstill for the ceremony which will make Farida the second queen of Egypt since Cleopatra. Troops of Bedouins from the desert performed feats of horsemanship in the streets.

The Moslem wedding ceremony will be witnessed by no woman, not even the bride. She must wait in one part of the palace while the marriage contract is solemnized in another.

Moaning Won't Help Situation

By VIRGINIA LEE

IT IS certainly odd, the things that cause people to decide that life isn't worth living.

Awhile ago a boy wanted to "end it all" because he had lost his best boy pal. A recent letter from an 18-year-old boy said that he doubted whether anything is worth while because the girl with whom he had been in love for three years could not be induced to accept his attentions.

And a young woman, just of age, feels she cannot go through life and face folk because some trouble with her teeth necessitated having her uppers out and she has to wear a plate.

On the other hand, men and women go cheerfully through life with the greatest of handicaps. I have mentioned before in this column a friend of my family who seems to have been pursued by a demon of ill-luck. His children were wayward, his business failed and he had to go to work for someone else at a very small salary—and he was by no means a young man when that happened. The last I talked with him, planning to invite him and his wife to a little party, the latter was in the hospital, and he was dreadfully worried, feeling she might not recover. He has two jobs now, which keep him so busy he hardly has a minute to call his own, he is not in very good health, and on top of that he has the worry of his wife's illness His only daughter died when her second child was born, and while his son has become an exemplary citizen and is a hard worker, he is not getting on financially as his dad wishes he was.

What is it that keeps some folk going on from year to year with chins up, taking all sorts of hardships in their stride, and even keeping jolly, when others let the least little thing get them down?

I know another man, a young man, healthy, happily married, owns a nice car, has a pleasant home, a fair salary—not opulent by any means, but has plenty to eat and wear, etc. He always is moaning. He works in "a dump," according to him. He is always broke, never has a square deal. His constant moan is, "I give up!" He doesn't half mean it, of course, and he has had plenty of hardships in his day. I admit, but I can't help feeling occasionally that if he would concentrate on his blessings and not on his misfortunes, he would be a lot pleasanter as a companion.

I've adopted the following for my motto: Whenever I find myself wailing about anything, I say, "No use moaning. See if you can't DO something about it, old girl." I think it is pretty good

BARCLAY ON BRIDGE

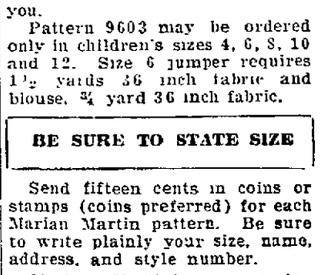
"The Authority on Authorities"

STARS OF DESTINY

A LUCKY STAR seems to govern the destiny of some declarers. When they get into their most important contracts, involving the largest amounts of points, then everything seems to break for them. Not only are the hostile cards so located that there is a chance to make an otherwise impossible contract, but the opponents in all close questions choose to play in the only way which will make the path easy.



(Dealer: South. Neither side vulnerable.)

North and South reached a contract of 6-Hearts on this deal after an opening bid of 1-Heart by South, 2-Hearts by North, four by South and six by North.

When the diamond Q was led by West, the declarer realized he needed a lot of lucky breaks to make this contract, but the fates were with him and as the cards were distributed he did not even have to make a guess.

After winning the first trick with the diamond A, the declarer led the heart Q. East obligingly covered with the K, which was won with the A and the only outstanding trump drawn If East had not covered, South would have been on the spot as with only two trumps out, he probably would have played his ace. He now set out to establish a spade in dummy to discard his losing diamond in the South hand. This he was able to do with the entries he had in the trump suit in dummy.

The question in his mind now was how to lose only one club trick. He played the 4 from dummy and East immediately won with the A. There was then only one loser in the hand

Try New Part, Change Style Of Hair-Do

By GLADYS GLAD

"America's Most Famous eBauty"

INDIVIDUALITY is the keynote of present-day hair styles. But if you desire to know how unique the average woman's coiffure is, look around at some of the women you know, and observe the manner in which they part their locks. You'll find, probably, very few who do not part their tresses on the side, for most women, once they adopt a certain hair parting, never think of trying a different one!

Beauticians say that it is a wise thing to change the part of the hair occasionally. Changing the part, they maintain, has a certain stimulating effect on the circulation in the scalp. The blood grows somewhat sluggish when the hair is continually parted in the same place. And for good hair health, the circulation in the scalp should be brisk and vigorous, so that the hair follicles will be given plenty of nourishment.

Not Becoming To All.

The center part has been more or less in the discard for quite some time. But since our new styles demand that we appear demure and romantically feminine, it would seem that the center part is to be restored to favor once again.

Of course, it stands to reason that the center part will not prove becoming to everyone. Naturally, if your features are of delicate, cameo-like loveliness, or the pure, classical beauty, you'll be able to carry off that center part to perfection. But if you have irregular features or a gaunt, thin face, the center part will not prove very flattering. What's more, if you have a low brow, the middle part will only emphasize it. And it will do the same for the extremely high forehead. Both types of forehead appear to best advantage when the coiffure obscures the hairline somewhat.

The girl with a long, thin face should avoid a center part always, as it will accentuate the length of her face. And the tall girl will appear even taller if she adopts it, for the middle parts is especially becoming to the damsel with a normal forehead an oval or heart-shaped face and regular features.

And if the lass who fits these qualifications adopts a center part and permits a few soft ringlets to curl about her ears and to peep from beneath her hat, she'll appear most bewitchingly demure and fascinatingly feminine.

Whalen believes a woman's place is in the home; while his wife thinks her place is on the golf links. After she leaves him a playboy takes over the duties of playing golf with her. The second feature is "Thunder Trail," with Gilbert Roland and Marsha Hunt.

Marriage Meddlers

By ADELE GARRISON

Continuation of "Married Comrades"

"DICKY!" I gasped, for his request to telephone Miss Whitlock was so surprising that I almost lost my breath. "Do you mean that you want me to engage her to stay with Mary and me at the Lansfield while the rehearsals are on?"

"I mean just that, heart of my heart," he gibed.

"But—" I protested. "That will be terribly expensive. Who is to pay her salary? We can hardly ask Mr. Verinzen—"

"Who's talking about asking that old hyena anything?" he retorted. "I shall pay Miss Whitlock myself out of my own little pants' pocket."

I made no reply, but I could not keep my astonished disapproval out of my face, and Dicky's brows drew into a frown.

"Don't look as if the bottom had dropped out of the stock market!" he said crossly. "I guess I can afford to pay a trained nurse for two or three weeks without risking the homestead being sold for taxes."

I knew the danger of protest, but what Dicky calls "the Scotch strain" in me made me rush in where my prudent angel would avoid treading.

"But rehearsals won't be a matter of two or three weeks," I said. "There's no knowing how long they'll last"

Dicky Loses Temper.

The angry flush on his cheeks deepened.

"But I know how long my need to have you on deck will last," he said so loudly that I shot an anxious glance toward the door, for fear his outburst might be heard. Either the glance or his own dislike of loud talking made him lower his voice, though his accents were still angry as he hurried on.

"If something doesn't break in the next two or three weeks," he said, "I'll be in one of three places, in Bellevue encased in a strait jacket the morgue with a bullet through my head, or the Tombs, charged with murder or homicide which we'll hope will be called 'justifiable' "

Madge Is Frightened.

I fancy the look of uncomprehending horror in my face made him realize how he was frightening me, for suddenly, with one of his swift, fantastic shiftings of humor, he laughed aloud.

"Did I frighten the poor little nit-wit out of her fragments of senses?" he queried "Come out of it, pronto! You ought to know I was only going through my exercises. You're in no danger of losing your one and only spouse unless New York traffic gets him It gets worse by the minute. But I do mean what I say about getting Miss Whitlock for a few weeks. If she's on a case, better tell her three at least, or as long as she expects to be on duty where she is. It wouldn't be fair to her otherwise. If she's not on duty, no need to specify the time beyond a week or two"

I swallowed hard and accepted the bizarre situation, as I have done so many others in my life with my temperamental husband.

"I suppose I would better try to get in touch with her immediately," I said with a look at my wrist watch. "It is getting late"

Phones Miss Whitlock.

"But not too late," Dicky countered, and I sensed the imperative need for hurry in his voice.

"I'll call her now," I said, rising

"Just a second'" Dicky stopped me with uplifted, cautionary hand "Don't tell her why or where you want her. If she's at liberty, have her come directly to the farmhouse I'll go after her. If she's on duty, your cue is perfunctory disappointment. I'll get at her from another angle."

"I'll try not to get things mixed up," I told him as I went out to the telephone.

Dicky followed me out, and stood close to me while I talked, evidently most anxious to know the nurse's verdict. But luck was with him. Miss Whitlock was in. She was at liberty. She would be delighted to come to us. Mindful of the secrecy surrounding her last sojourn with us, she did not even ask who was ill, but simply said that she would be ready any time we came for her.

"I'll beat it over there at once," Dicky said, "while your get a room ready for her. But I needn't warn you not to wake Mother up if you can help it."

Beat after each addition until smooth. Divide batter into two parts and to one part add spices and molasses. Place light and dark mixtures alternately, a tablespoonful at a time, into two greased cake tins. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 35 minutes. Cool and frost.

—o—

Ornamental Frosting

3½	C. confectioner's sugar	3	egg whites

Mock Mince Meat Pie

2	C. apple sauce	¼	tsp nutmeg
2	Tbsp. brown sugar		Few grains salt
½	tsp. cinnamon	½	C. raisins

Plain pastry

Mix apple sauce, brown sugar, cinnamon, nutmeg, salt and raisins together. Pour into unbaked pie shell. Roll out the pastry extra thin and cut into strips ½ inch wide and 10 to 12 inches long and place on the top of the pie, in lattic fashion. Cut an extra strip 1 inch wide and place around the edge of the pan to prevent juice from oozing out Press the pastry together and pinch with the finger tips to make a fancy edge. Bake in a hot oven (425 degrees) for 35 minutes.

—o—

Pastry Recipe

2½	C. sifted flour	¾	C. shortening
1	tsp. salt	5	Tbsp. milk or water

Sift flour and salt together. Add one-half of shortening to flour. Cut in with pastry blender or two knives until mixture looks like meal. Add the remaining shortening and continue cutting until the particles are size of a navy bean. Sprinkle milk or water, 1 Tbsp. at a time, over the mixture. With a fork, work lightly together until all particles are moistened and in small lumps. Add just enough milk or water to moisten to form a mass which, when stirred, will clean the bowl. Press dampened particles together into a ball. Makes one 9-inch two crust pie.

—o—

Butterscotch Waffle Bread

To make waffle bread use any foundation sweet dough recipe Take enough dough to make two 8-inch squares when rolled out about ¼ inch thick. Cut each square into 8 one-inch strips and weave these in and out. Place on greased baking sheet and let rise until double in bulk. Brush with melted butter and sprinkle with the following mixture:

2	Tbsp. melted butter	2	tsp. cinnamon
⅓	C. brown sugar	¼	C. chopped nuts

Bake at 425 degrees for 15 minutes.

—o—

Swedish Tea Ring

Take part of the refrigerator dough and roll out as thin as possible, then spread with melted butter Sprinkle with sugar, cinnamon, and chopped nuts and roll up like a jelly roll. Then join the ends to form a ring and trim the edges. Place on a buttered cookie sheet Snip with scissors, holding the scissors perpendicularly from the outside of the ring toward the center, all the way around, about one-inch apart. Separate each point and then let rise and bake 20 minutes at 350 degrees

—o—

Deep Fried Salmon on Pastry Squares

1	lb canned salmon	4	Tbsp milk Crumbs
2	eggs, beaten well

6 slices toast or pastry squares

Take salmon apart carefully, leaving it in large pieces about the size of a walnut Dip carefully in crumbs, then in egg mixture and roll in crumbs once more. Chill Fry in deep fat (390 degrees) until golden brown. Arrange salmon on toast or pastry squares. Serve with Flemish sauce or tartar sauce Serves six.

—o—

Crimson Sauce.

½	C red currant juice	2	Tbsp currants, cut fine
2	tsp. lemon juice	4	maraschino cherries, cut fine
2	Tbsp hot water
	Dash of salt
1	tsp maraschino cherry juice

—o—

Never-Fail Hollandaise Sauce.

2	egg yolks	½	C melted butter
½	tsp. salt	1	Tbsp lemon juice

Speck cayenne pepper

Flemish Sauce

2	Tbsp. butter	1	Tbsp. tomato catsup
2	Tbsp. flour	1	Tbsp. chopped, mixed sour pickle
1	C. stock	1	Tbsp. grated horseradish

Melt butter, but do not allow to brown. Stir in flour and cook to a light brown, about 4 minutes. Add stock slowly and stir constantly. Bring to a boiling point and boil three minutes. If the stock is not well seasoned, add ½ tsp. salt, ⅛ tsp. pepper and a few drops kitchen bouquet. Add remaining ingredients and reheat.

Pabco Linoleum Distinguished By Hard Surface

Pabco linoleum, one of the features introduced at the Gasco Food Institute cooking school at the Ohio theater this week, is one of the low price floor coverings on the market, and is distinguished by its hard surface.

Pabco is non-porus and therefore grit and dirt cannot penetrate the surface, Roy R. Powell, manager of the Jim Brown store, points out.

This attractive floor covering in rug patterns comes in such variety of colors and patterns that any kitchen color scheme may be matched. Patterns range from colorful tiles suitable for kitchens and porches to conventional patterns for bed rooms, halls, and dining rooms.

Gasco Institute Displayed Gold Medal Products

Gold Medal kitchen-tested products, distributed in the Mansfield district by the Tracy and Avery company, wholesale grocers, were among the foods featured at the Gasco food institute which closed today at the Ohio theater.

The Tracy and Avery company, for years one of the outstanding wholesale grocers in north central Ohio, distributes Gold Medal coffee fresh from the roasters to hundreds of grocers. Other Gold Medal products used at the Gasco institute are ketchup, peaches and other canned fruit that are used daily on the dinner table.

Gold Medal coffee was sampled at the food institute through the courtesy of the wholesale firm, which also had on display the various other products it distributes.

But Branch Bobbitt, like so many other independent experts, prefers Luckies . . .
"AT AUCTIONS in my warehouse in Farmville, North Carolina," says Mr. Branch Bobbitt, "the higher the tobacco sells for, the better my profits. So I'm always glad to see Lucky Strike buyers in there bidding. They know what they want and they'll keep bidding right up until they get it.
"Well—in a cigarette—it's the tobacco that counts. I know tobacco and I know what tobacco is in what cigarettes. So that's one reason I've smoked Luckies for 5 or 6 years."
Mr. Bobbitt represents the "aristocracy" of tobacco experts. He judges the tobacco that the growers grow. He's impartial, not connected with any cigarette manufacturer.
Many other experts agree with Mr. Bobbitt. Sworn records show that, among independent tobacco experts, Luckies have twice as many exclusive smokers as have all the other cigarettes combined.

17 Dead, 44 Still Missing In Canadian School Blaze

SEARCH RUINS FOR BODIES OF MORE VICTIMS

Police, Firemen Hampered By Below Zero Weather as They Dig In Fire Debris.

ST. HYACINTHE, Que.—(U.P.) The roll was called at what remained of the Sacred Heart college today, and 44 children and teachers failed to answer. Seventeen were known dead. It was feared that the others also perished in the flames that destroyed the school yesterday.

Icy winds and weather 10 degrees below zero hindered police, firemen and volunteer workers, who poked in the ruins for more bodies. Of the bodies recovered, only two had been identified—those of Rev. Brother Jean Baptiste, 64, and Joseph Vincent, 15.

Probes Blast Report.

Coroner Paul Morin ordered an investigation of reports that an explosion had preceded the fire, which was discovered at 2 a. m. yesterday. He said that several survivors had told of having felt the building shake. Debris was found a hundred yards away.

Today, dozens of mothers and fathers walked through the snow past the ice-covered ruins to the little morgue to search for the bodies of their children or to await anxiously some word of the missing. Most of the bodies had been horribly seared, and identification was almost impossible.

Some bodies lay on planks, others on shelves built last night. One was the body of the brother-teacher, the others were those of children.

Two victims died in the hospital. Several others were expected to die. Two brothers were among the 20 severely burned or injured. They were the Rev. Father David, 26, of Pawtucket, R. I., and Brother Alexis, 27, of Woonsocket, R. I.

Tragedy piled on tragedy last night as frantic parents sought to determine the fate of their children. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Gendron, hurrying here from Richmond, Que., to search for their son, Emile, 12, were killed when their automobile was struck by a Montreal-bound express train. Authorities feared that Emile had perished in the fire.

Rector Directs Hunt.

Rev. Brother Lucius, rector of the college, who had called the roll of the 160 children and teachers who had lived in the flame-swept dormitory, directed the activities of black-robed brothers in helping firemen and police search the ruins.

So great had been the confusion that it had been difficult to determine how many children and how many teachers were among the 27 missing. A great majority were children.

The fire was believed to have started in one of the dormitory wings. It had virtually enveloped half the building when the sleeping children and their teachers were awakened.

Miss M'Cormic To Sing Tonight In High Auditorium

Miss McCormic was to have appeared in Mansfield last fall but had to cancell the concert because of another engagement. Tickets for tonight's concert are available at the Tawse Pharmacy, Bates on West Fourth street, and the Central Drug store,. Tickets may also be purchased at the auditorium box office. General admission price for the concert will be 25 cents.

Richard R. Poling of Mansfield, who gained a reputation as a football rater last fall, has just completed the biggest job he ever tackled. He is the author of a record book of football which is just off the presses. It includes all of the records of the major teams of as far back as 1924. First interested in figuring football rankings and standings as a hobby, Poling was prevailed to market his compilations last fall, and they were used in a number of publications.

Borrowing an eligible male, even for an evening, isn't so easy as it sounds, but members of Delta Theta Tau will have escorts for all of the visiting sorority sisters who attend the convention dinner dance at the Leland ballroom Saturday night. About 150 young women are expected and there will be an escort for each one for the dance. It took some real team work and co-operation, what with the married members of the Mansfield group offering their husbands and other sorority girls in town offering their best beaux while they sit at home and chew fingernails Saturday night. But Delta Theta Tau girls said they appreciate the sisterly sacrifices, and will do as much for the other organizations if the opportunity presents itself.

The women of Mansfield aren't the only ones who are interested in learning new and easy ways to prepare meals. At the opening session of the Gasco Food Institute yesterday at the Ohio theater, a number of men were on hand, and all of them appeared just as interested in what was going on as the hundreds of women.

Weller Pupils Injured When School Bus, Truck Collide.

Two Weller township high school pupils suffered minor injuries about 8 a. m., today when a school bus collided head-in with a truck on a county road northeast of Pavonia.

The pupils, Roscoe Anderson, 13, and Winona Clingan, 14, were treated for bruises and abrasions on their legs and permitted to attend classes at the Union high school, Sheriff E. P. Long said.

They were the only passengers in a north-bound bus operated by C. C. Oswalt of Weller township and received the injuries when they were thrown from their seats by the impact.

The crash occurred, Sheriff Long said, when the bus got out of control on an icy hill and collided with a truck driven by A. L. Franks of Ashland.

The Anderson youth is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Foster Anderson, and the Clingan girl's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Frend Clingan.

MADISON BOARD ELECTS KIPP

New Members Take Posts On Township School Group at Organization Meeting.

Philip Kipp was elected president of the Madison Township board of education at a re-organization meeting of the group held this week at Madison high school. He succeeds Carl Phillipon as president.

Other officers elected are L. C. Hughes, vice-president, and William C. Reinoehl, clerk. Hughes and Reinoehl were re-elected to their offices for another year.

Two new members, elected to the board last fall, attended their first meeting. They are: Fred Matthes, and Esley Cleckner.

An operating budget of $107,000 for the calendar school year, was adopted by the board. The budget is nearly the same as adopted by the board for the past year, according to William Reinoehl, clerk.

The board approved the purchase of a new sound motion picture projection machine to be used in the high school for visual education work. Mrs. Helen Brown of Mansfield, former teacher in the Mansfield schools, was hired by the board as a third and fourth grade teacher at the [illegible] school to replace Miss Naomi Wittmer who resigned last week because of illness.

200 HOME ECONOMISTS IN CITY FOR WESTINGHOUSE CONFERENCE

More than 200 home economists, employed by the largest power companies in America, together with merchandising officials from these firms, were in Mansfield today for the opening of the three-day home planning and home service conference which the Westinghouse Institute is conducting.

I. W. Clark, manager of the Westinghouse kitchen planning department, will be in charge of the conference which follows on the heels of the annual kitchen clinic that was held the first two days of the week. More than 250 men and women are expected to come to Mansfield for the meetings before the end of the week.

Each day's program will be based on Westinghouse products, with officials of the company giving talks and demonstrations on how to get the most service out of electrical appliances and equipment for the home A round table discussion will be held the final day.

Today's program is based on appliances and laundry equipment, and tomorrow the visiting home economists will hear of ranges and refrigerators, while the kitchen in general will be the topic Friday.

One of the most interesting features of the program will be the appearance at the Westinghouse auditorium Friday afternoon of Strickland Gillilan, foremost American humorist, former newspaper man, and poet.

Solal events will incude a dinner tonight at the Leland ballroom and a dinner-dance and floor show Thursday night.

The kitchen clinic, which brought to Mansfield 23 nationally famous women magazine writers on home departments, ended Tuesday afternoon. Interesting discussions of the last day were on electric dish washers and the advisability of using colors in manufacturing kitchen equipment.

I. W. CLARK

One of the questions was "what could possibly make dishwashing attractive to the housewife?" The visitors took a lively interest in the question.

All of them agreed that the first thing is getting away from the daily, routine "drudgery" and this can be done only with mechanical washers which will do the work while the housewife saves her time and her energies for household tasks that are more to her liking.

In short, the only way to make dishwashing attractive is not to have to do it, they agreed.

Ranges and kitchen equipment should be predominately white, these authorities pointed out after discussing the present trend toward color in the kitchen. While touches of red, blue or green are acceptable, all white is far more practical, they believe, and color schemes should be carried out in curtains, wall treatment, bric-a-brac or dishes.

PARIS LEARNS 'WARNING' LED TO QUICK MOVE

New Cabinet Organized After French Hear Rumor of Nazis Foreign Affairs Program.

PARIS—(U.P.)—A warning that Germany might take forceful action in foreign politics was a contributing factor in the quick ending of France's cabinet crisis, it was reported today

Two usually well informed sources told the United Press that Andre Francois-Poncet, ambassador to Germany, made a most ominous report to the government regarding the possibilities of Germanys intentions in the foregn field.

One source asserted the report was so serious in nature that it was a contributing reason why Leon Blum, Socialist leader, tried to form a cabinet on a national coalition bases and then abondoned his attempt with startling speedines when he found himself unable to obtain both left wing and centrist support.

See Action In March.

This informant said that Francois-Poncet warned the government that Adolf Hitler was preparing some such move like his denunciation of the military re-occupation of the Rhineland. It was indicated that the German move might be made in March.

It was recalled at once that the political expert of the newspaper Oeuvre asserted only a week ago that Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy, Germanys ally, told a private gathering of high fascist leaders that the month of March was likely to be of importance.

Whatever the truth of the report regarding Germany, Camille Chautemps has succeeded in forming a cabinet with the membership restricted to his own radical Socialist party. Chautempts was leader of the popular front cabinet which fell last Friday. Thus he and his key men remain in office, the difference being that Socialists will support him but were not included in the cabinet membership. Also, the communists who supported the previous cabinet will be nominally in opposition. But if they vote against the government, Chautemps will depend on votes from the center parties to give him a majority.

There is really no change in the countrys foreign, social or financial policies.

Paul Marchandeau, 49, lawyer for big champagne firms, member of the chamber of deputies and for 19 years mayor of Rheims, is key man in the new cabinet as finance minister, succeeding Paul Bonnet, who was the central figure in last week's cabinet fall.

The Great Game of Politics

—By FRANK R. KENT

The Troubles of a Leader.

IN POLITICS, as in life generally, it often happens that having obtained the thing he sought a man regrets having gotten it and wonders why in the world he wanted it anyhow. There is reason to believe that emotional reactions such as these frequently rack the sturdy form of Senator Alben W. Barkley, majority leader of the senate and chief White House reliance in that unpredictable body.

Senator Barkley's hot Kentucky heart was strongly set on being leader and after a strenuous struggle he won the coveted honor from Senator Harrison by the narrow margin of a single vote in a secret ballot. It was commonly agreed that this was secured through the Roosevelt support, manifested in various ways, but particularly in his "Dear Alben" letter, and even more effectively by the White House pressure, which at the last moment swung the unfortunate Senator Dieterich, of Illinois, pledged to Mr. Harrison, over to Mr. Barkley.

THAT IS the way the deed was done, but it hasn't turned out very happily for "Dear Alben." On the contrary, it is his humiliated rival who seems thoroughly to enjoy himself, while the Barkley sufferings are much too plain to be missed. For example, take the situation in which he, a Kentucky Democrat, is placed by the so-called anti-lynching bill, the fight against which has reduced the senate to complete futility for nearly three weeks. Hardly anyone thinks that, if he were not the administration leader, Mr. Barkley would be supporting this bill. It is certainly reasonable to think that if he were a free man he would now be fighting with other southern Democrats to prevent the enactment of a measure which not only will not diminish lynching but, as Senator Borah points out, insults the south and threatens the last vestige of the local self-government principle.

IT WILL be conceded that this is not a pretty position for a Kentucky Democrat to occupy. On the one hand, he is forced to push a vicious bill which the president wants but, not very courageously, refrains from openly advocating. On the other hand, he had to endure the taunts of his southern colleagues of "taking orders" from the colored lobbyist, Walter White, who watches the fight from the gallery and is in close touch with the leaders At the same time, he is unable to find an adequate answer to the charge that the real reason for the desperate fight to jam the bill through is political and not humanitarian; that it is part payment of the administration debt to colored leaders who, in 1936, helped line up for Mr. Roosevelt the great colored vote in the northern states; that it is primarily designed to cement the New Deal hold on that vote.

THE reason there is no adequate answer is because the charge is true and there isn't a politician in the country who does not know it. That under any circumstances all this would be embarrassing to Leader Barkley is clear enough. It isn't the kind of fight which commends him to the people of Kentucky nor to the bulk of the real Democrats in the senate. But his discomfort is obviously increased by two things —one the fact that this is the year in which he must be renominated to keep his seat; the other, the well-authenticated report that Gov. "Happy" Chandler, a vote-getter of tested and unusual ability, will be a candidate against him.

CLEARLY, this puts Barkley on a very hot spot. As administration leader, he cannot relax in his efforts to pass the anti-lynching bill, but his efforts in that direction arm his enemies at home and enhance the prospects that Governor Chandler, who controls the state organization, may run and beat him. Nor, in such a primary contest can he expect any aid from Mr. Roosevelt. Governor Chandler has been just as strong a New Dealer as Senator Barkley, and probably would be helped rather than hurt if the president attempted to interfere. Poor Alben. What a life! After a mortifying futile special session in which his followers failed to follow, he had an outbreak of boils on the neck. About the time he got rid of them this anti-lynch bill filibuster set in and his colleagues began to twit him about his new associations. Then comes along the "Happy" Chandler candidacy threat. On top of all that are the muttered complaints from powerful left wing advisers of the president that, as a leader, he "lacks steam." Undoubtedly, there are many moments these days when Senator Barkley wishes he had never heard of the leadership, much less acquired it. And Senator Harrison just "laffs and laffs," for which he hardly can be blamed.

Hollywood Speaks—

—By ROBBIN COONS

HOLLYWOOD—When you count the miracle men of the movies, don't forget Harold Lloyd. There's a fellow who does more than any other actor to bring up the years in the "average life" of a star.

This year Lloyd will be celebrating his 25th anniversary as a film actor.

He's busy again now, making "Professor, Beware," his first film since 1936 when "The Milky Way" piled up a million-and-a-half gross —nothing like the returns on his old silent thrillers like "Safety Last" and "Why Worry," but more than respectable in the talkie age when foreign markets necessarily were curtailed. Unless precedent takes a woeful beating, "Professor, Beware" will be equally successful.

Since that day in 1913 when Harold Lloyd found his first movie job —with the old Edison company in San Diego—many screen comics have come and gone. Today Lloyd is the last of the ranking active funny men of the silents, unless you look for a picture soon from Chaplin, as few do.

Lloyd is not as active as he used to be in the silents, when three pictures a year was his usual output. Compared to Chaplin, he is a night-and-day laborer. Even now, he might make more pictures if—a big IF—he could find the right stories.

And the other comedians of his time? Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle faded from the screen before his time, died in comparative obscurity. Lloyd Hamilton, his days of stardom long gone, died out of the sun. Harry Langdon shone for a while in features, was eclipsed, has continued in short comedies. Buster Keaton faded as a star, now is a director.

One major reason for Lloyd's movie longevity is the obvious fact that, as a personality, he isn't "funny" in the accepted sense. Privately he doesn't wow his friends with wisecracks or jests, although he is fond of a practical joke. His comedies, except for the addition of dialogue, are built substantially as they were in the "silents." He plays essentially the same character, whether it's labeled a professor of archeology as currently or a shy youth as in "The Freshman" —and the character is funny because the situations in which it becomes involved.

He labors on those situations, and the "gags" springing from them with the assiduity of a collegian cramming for a final exam. In fact, with each new picture he is actually taking an examination —before the fans. He realizes, astutely, what has brought him a passing grade with honors in the past.

Alexander Voted To Hall of Fame

Former Pitcher Only Player Selected In Ballot By Newspapermen.

By GAYLE TALBOT

NEW YORK—(AP)—Baseball's solemnly elected immortals shoved over on their pedestals today and welcomed their newest member, one of the best loved of them all, Grover Cleveland Alexander.

"Old Pete," the great pitcher, who stood big league batters on their heads for 20 years, joins the select little group enshrined in the hall of fame at Cooperstown, N. Y., by a flattering vote of the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Receives 212 Votes.

Of 117 players of the past who received at least one vote in this year's poll, Alex was the only one to be named on the necessary 75 per cent of the ballots. Needing 197 votes for election, he received 212.

Three other bygone stars fell just short. George Sisler getting 179 votes, Wee Willie Keeler 177 and Eddie Collins 175.

Those whom Alexander joins are Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth, Honus Wagner, Christy Mathewson, Walter Johnson, Napoleon Lajoie, Tris Speaker and Cy Young, all named in past ballots as the outstanding players since 1900.

Major league club owners in joint session recently added two great managers, Connie Mack and John McGraw; the first National league president, Morgan Bulkeley; the organizer of the American league, Ban Johnson, and George Wright, pioneer player and manager.

Alexander's election is certain to strike a popular chord. There had been grumblings because he was not named earlier.

Alex, like many another old-timer, has had tough sledding since his major league epilogue with the Phillies in 1930. After pitching in five games for Dallas in the Texas league later that season, he finally left organized baseball at the age of 43, and since then has been about the country with the House of David and other semi-pro outfits. He manages his own club now at Springfield, Ill.

One of the Best.

Alex never pitched a no-hitter, but that was about the only thing he missed. He turned in four one-hitters in 1915, a record which probably never will be equalled. He won 28 games in his first big league season, another modern record, and for three straight years, starting in 1915, he won 30 or more victories, a mark equalled only by Mathewson. Six times he led the National league in games won and lost, and five times he had the lowest earned run average. In 1916 he pitched 16 shutouts, another trifling record.

Vosmik Pleased As Sox

Cleveland Boy Looks Forward to Biggest Year of Career at Boston.

By OSCAR RUHL
News-Journal Sports Editor.

JOE VOSMIK is looking forward to his greatest year in baseball next summer, according to the former Cleveland sandlot star's newspaper friends in the upstate city.

Joe Vosmik

Happy over his good fortune of being purchased by the Boston Red Sox, Vosmik figures that the short left field fence in Fenway park is just what the doctor would describe for a man with his type of hitting.

Of course, Vosmik would be glad to go anywhere after serving a season with the St. Louis Browns, but the location of the left field fence in the Boston park is supposedly the real cause for his enthusiasm to don a Red Sox monkey suit.

Only New York in the American league plays in a park with a shorter left field fence, and not being quite lucky enough to be a Yankee, Vosmik is satisfied to be a Boston chattel.

Vosmik isn't making any bets as to the number of balls he will park into the street beyond the Fenway barrier as he seldom hits a high ball for any distance, but he expects to bounce many a drive off the wall, and the rebounds usually go for two bases unless the gardener gets a break in fielding the ball.

Another reason for Vosmik's delight in being shipped to Boston is because of the fact that he will be reunited with Billy Evans, who gave the Cleveland Bohemian boy his start in baseball. Vosmik is a great admirer of Evans, and the feeling is mutual, we believe.

We have a suspicion that Evans had more than a little to do with encouraging the deal in which the Red Sox gave up Buck Newsom, Buster Mills and Red Kress for Vosmik.

Henry Cotton will not come to America to display his egotistical temperment, not to mention a fair assortment of shots.

Reports were circulated that Cotton would come over to appear in Bobby Jones' Augusta affair, but he doesn't feel the lure of American gold, it seems.

In the first place, Cotton does not need the money. He is the golfing hero of England and has so many pupils that it is impossible for him to instruct all who wish to learn under him. In other words the money is rolling in, and he's setting on top of the world.

Secondly, Henry doesn't feel that he needs to come to America to prove that he is the champion of all the world. He apparently was satisfied with himself after he defeated the entire U. S. Ryder Cup team in the last British Open and then trimmed Denny Shute in what was labeled as the championship match of the world.

THAT Sandusky "jinx" still exists. The courtiers of Mansfield high, seeking to sink the "jinx" last night at Sandusky, ran into a determined counter offense and came out on the short end of a 33 to 24 score.

Although favored to topple the Blue Streaks, the Tygers, after getting off to a whirlwind start, folded in the second half. It was Sandusky's first victory in five starts.

Stem Tyger Offense.

Coach Russ Murphy's proteges, led by Johnny Hallabrin, grabbed an early lead in the nip-and-tuck melee, but Joe Balconi, sparkplug of last year's football aggregation that upset the Tygers, 6 to 0, and lanky Barnett, teamed to stem the Mansfield offense. The Mansfield outfit counted from the field only twice after the intermission.

The Tygers hopped into a lead in the opening minute and for the balance of the first half held the advantage. At one time Mansfield was ahead by a 13 to 4 count.

With Hallabrin dropping in two difficult shots from the side and another near the center of the court, the Tygers drove ahead and were leading, 10 to 4, in the opening quarter. Mansfield's offense continued to click and at half time was ahead 16 to 12.

Sandusky came to life after the test period and in short order cut the lead to 16 to 15. Elmer Dials registered a sucker shot and Hallabrin coverted a foul to give Mansfield a 19 to 15 lead midway in the stanza. They were the only points the Tygers could drop through the loop until midway in the last quarter.

At this point, Barnett and Balconi started to work. After Roy Gant's overhand shot tied the score at 19-all, little Balconi put the Streaks ahead for the first time by converting a charity toss, and Sandusky led 20 to 19, as the period ended.

Obtain Big Lead.

Barnett moved into the spotlight by dropping in four points and the Streaks were ahead to stay. Coach Wallace Glenwright's athletes opened up from all sides and jumped into a commanding 26 to 19 advantage before Hallabrin scored Mansfield's first point on a foul.

Hallabrin also dropped in his club's second goal shortly after, but it was all over. Sandusky piled up a 33 to 24 lead and then stalled for the two last minutes. Hallabrin topped the individual scoring with 12 points, and Barnett paced the winners with eight.

Barconi, Thomas, Freyensee and Hallabrin were ejected from the game on fouls in the last period.

Coach Harry Mehock's reserves defeated Sandusky, 24 to 12, in the preliminary attraction. Herpich and Rudolph led the offense with six points apiece.

RAMS STOP LUCAS CLUB

Gain Sole Possession of Third Place By Halting Visitors, 33 to 32.

Madison high school's Rams are the sole occupants of third place in the Richland county league standings today.

The Rams broke the three-way tie for third place last night by turning back Lucas, 33 to 32, in a nip-and-tuck struggle which had the crowd on its feet throughout the game.

The defeat drops Coach Gil Weikart's quintet to fifth place, with the idle Lexington Minutemen taking over the fourth rung.

Madison trailed during the entire first half, but came back in the third period to take a lead it never released. Victory prospects looked dull for the Rams in the first period as the visitors gained a 13 to 3 lead, but reduced the margin to one point in the next quarter, 20 to 19.

Coach Al Fendrick's men limited Lucas to one basket in the third frame to go ahead by a 27 to 22 count. The lead gained in this period enabled the Rams to win as the invaders staged a desperate but futile rally in the fourth period to crawl within one point of tying the count.

Although Tom Greulch, the league's leading scorer accounted for nine points, it was Bob Crawford who was the chief menace for the Lucas five last night. Crawford's spectacular shooting kept the Weikartment in the game al the way. He accounted for 16 points. Bob Wilkins led the Madison scoring with 13 points.

In the preliminary, the Madison reserves trimmed Lucas, 13 to 8.

Grid's Next Year This and That

(Copyright, 1937, by) GRIDLEY ADAMS.

I'D love again to see a Christmas tree lighted with twinkling, smelly candles. I'd pay double the price for a ticket to a one-ring circus; and I'd get up at dawn, or long before, to see said circus arrive in town, and try to beat the other boys at getting the chance to bring water in pails to the elephants, just so as to get in without having to pay out my quarter. I'd love to have a sleight-of-hand performer once more beckon to me to come up on the stage while he showed the other boys how easy it was for him to pull a rabbit out of my sleeve. I'd give a "grand" if I could again experience the thrill of taking to bed with me my first pair of rubber boots. I'd risk another "fifty" just for the chance to go fishing on a Saturday morning, where I knew I would meet those Williams College students, with their split bamboos and empty creels, but plenty of loose change in their jeans which they would willingly swap for my mess o'trout, and thus supply me with my week's spending money. I'd gamble a lot just to brave the world again by running away, while in my teens, and going to Europe, where I once communed with the spirits of the Hunchback of Notre-Dame, with the Two Princes in the Tower, with Queen Mary as she roamed through Holyrood Castle, and then coming back to America with but 16 cents in my pocket. I'd give a whole season's opera tickets just again to have Patti make my eyes well up at hearing her sing "Home, Sweet Home." I'd pay for a month's room rent just for half an hour's roaming through the once art-galleried foyer of Simeon Ford's "Grand Union Hotel" that stood at the corner of Forty-second, opposite Grand Central Depot, and again read the wording on the two marble tablets ("Pictures on this side; poetry here") that guarded the entrance to the men's rest room. I'd order drinks all day long for one more chance to stand before the old Hoffman House bar and gaze in admiration at Bougereau's masterpiece, "Nymphs and Satyr"; and which a tramp, upon seeing it, once said: "I've traveled all over this blamed land, but I'll be blowed if I ever saw that brook." I'll give untold millions at being able to again see the expression of achievement that sun-beamed my baby girl's face, as first she stood upon her own legs by pulling herself up by tugging at my pants legs. I'd swear off drinking if I could again see that famous triple "From Tinker to Evers to Chance."

What, reader, are the missings of times gone by that these bring back to your memories? Write me, or better yet, ask for me when next you stop at this happy hostelry, the Hotel Governor Clinton, and let's reminisce together.

Little Nora Nitwit

read, in an Iowa newspaper, that "The thieves took everything else he had in the room, so Mr. Ferris borrowed a pair of pants from the housemaid while he went to the store and secured a pair of shoes, socks, etc." at which Little Nora Nitwit just laughed and laughed because she wondered if those pants had any ruffles on the edges.

It is this genuine hospitality and courtesy of the entire Hotel Governor Clinton personnel that makes it one of the most really popular hostelries in all New York City.

S.

HOLD INTEREST AS LIST DRIFTS IN SMALL RANGE

Aircraft, Copper and Utility Shares Dominate Early Dealings.

NEW YORK —(AP)— Traders picked up aircraft, copper and utility shares in early stock market dealings today while the list generally drifted in a narrow course.

The TVA and other aspects of the utility controversy in Washington seemed to find better interpretation in trading quarters, causing a shift into Consolidated Edison, North American, Public Service of New Jersey and American Water Works, among others. Gains were small in light trading, however.

Rail bonds as well as stocks lost more ground. Most commodities held in a narrow range.

Market analysts sifted through the business news for indications of a broadening of the new year pick-up in production.

However, the "Iron Age", in its weekly survey, noted steel buyers were ordering only on a hand-to-mouth basis, a policy seen in other markets for raw materials and finished goods.

Announcement the Rockefeller interests were planning to complete the Rockefeller Center project in New York City with an outlay of $12,000,000 for three more buildings attracted wide attention in view of hopes construction would take on fresh recovery strength this year.

BOSTON WOOL

BOSTON—(AP)—(USDA)— Little activity was being reported in the Boston wool market yesterday. Mills were not buying enough wool to establish market prices. On the other hand, there was no particular pressure to sell. In view of the decline in prices in Australian and New Zealand wool markets since the first of the year, reports of the opening in London were being awaited with a great deal of interest by members of the Boston trade.

HONOR SHULTZ AT DINNER HERE

150 Friends and Associates Pay Tribute to Veteran of 52 Years of Railroading.

D. K. Chase, general superintendent of the Eastern division at Pittsburgh, who was toastmaster during the banquet meeting, told the story of Shultz's long career with the Pennsylvania and paid him honor for his service with the company and as a councilman and civic leader.

In a paraphrase of Antony's funeral sermon over Caesar in Shakespeare's play, R. C. Miller, general superintendent of the Eastern Ohio division at Pittsburgh, said: "I come to praise Caesar, not to bury him. 'Charlie' has achieved success by being big in small affairs. The great Pennsylvania system is a moument to him and other men like him who have served the company well."

E. A. Foard, of Pittsburgh, superintendent of stations and transfers, added that "He (Shultz) has invested his life in the service of the Pennsylvania. It has paid him dividends and he has paid many to the company. The distinguished service button he's wearing is the highest honor the railroad can pay an employe and it is representative of the value he has been to the company."

W. M. Wardrop, assistant to the general manager at Pittsburgh, said, "I know Charlie was, and is, a very good operator. We still admire men who can handle the key right, and we hope his retirement is as happy and restful as his service has been diligent."

Others who spoke in tribute to Shultz were W. P. Hammond, district freight agent; E. B. Haney, assistant general freight agent at Pittsburgh; P. H. Ober, vice president of the Mansfield Tire and Rubber company; C. L. VanDerau, manager of manufacturing at the Westinghouse plant; Paul W. Williams, secretary-manager of the Chamber of Commerce; F. B. Mahoney, vice president of the Humphryes Manufacturing company; Howard P. Hosler, of the Mansfield Hay and Grain company; Service Safety Director Tracy C. Styert; A. C. Rhoads, secretary of the Tappan Stove company.

Toastmaster Chase, who presented the Gladstone bag to Shultz, read a number of congratulatory letters and telegrams from friends of the veteran railroader.

During the dinner period, a musical program was presented by entertainers from the Greystone and following the testimonials, a musical program was given under the direction of Richard VanDyne, manager of the DeLuxe Cab company.

Shultz, who will be 70 years old April 2, has served four terms as Republican councilman from the Second ward. He was elected for the fifth time last November without opposition. He lives at 82 Parkwood boulevard.

This Beauty Secret Comes From a Doctor

Most women don't need beauty parlors. Your own doctor will tell you that sallow complexions and pimply skins are rarely matters for cosmetics. Because most skin blemishes are aggravated by constipation.

Dr. F. M. Edwards, during his years of practice, treated hundreds of women for constipation and frequently noted remarkable improvement in their appearance. He used a purely vegetable compound—Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. This laxative is gentle, yet peculiarly effective because it increases the bile flow without shocking the intestinal system. Try Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. All druggists, 15¢, 30¢ and 60¢.

PLAN "STADIUM NIGHT"

SHELBY—Plans were made at the United Youth council meeting last night at the First Baptist church for "Stadium night" which will be held on Jan. 26 at 85 East Main street for the young people of the Shelby churches, according to Doris Briggs, publicity chairman, today.

During the World war allied submarines did patrol work in the Strait of Dover, the Baltic and Adriatic seas.

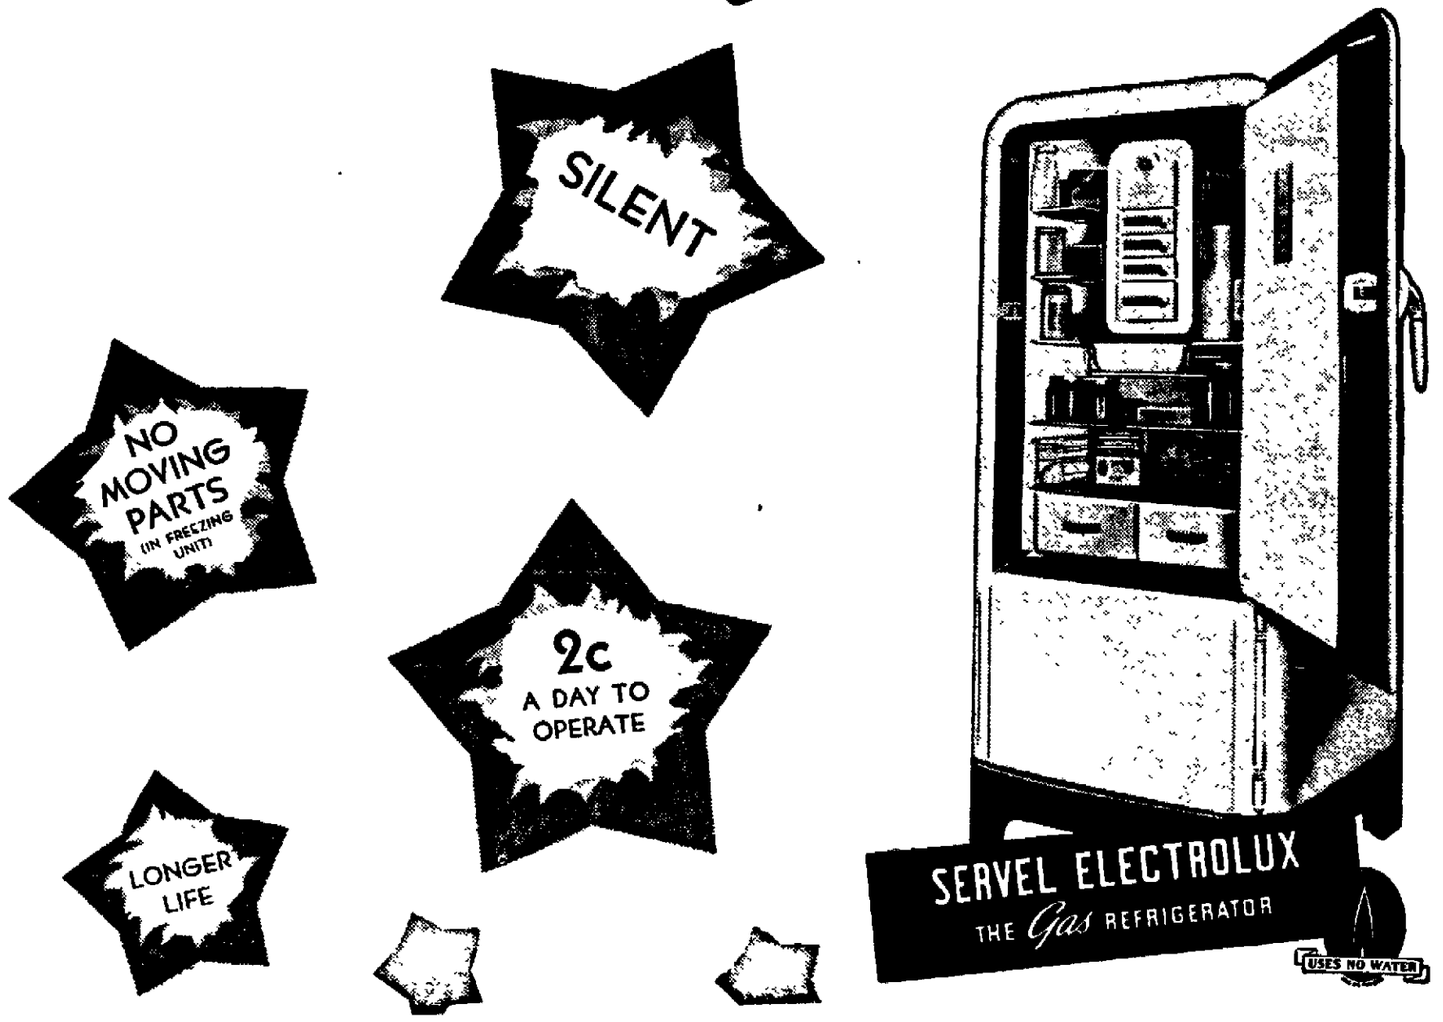
An All-Star Performer.....



At The Gasco Food Institute
....and In Your Own Kitchen

MISS KATHERINE THIELE
Miss Thiele is special food lecturer of the 1938 Gasco Food Institute in charge of all programs.

No star performer at a cooking school or in the kitchen receives more enthusiastic praise than does the Servel Electrolux gas refrigerator. Its many exclusive advantages place it in a class by itself as a kitchen performer. Its principle of operation is entirely different. A tiny gas flame circulates the refrigerant — replacing all moving parts in its freezing system. Naturally then, its operation is completely and permanently silent, and it lasts years longer because there is nothing to wear out.

Economy of operation, too, is another outstanding feature of the gas refrigerator. Results of actual surveys made among Servel Electrolux owners prove conclusively that it costs an average of less than 2 cents a day to operate.

See the beautiful new Servel Electrolux in action at the 1938 Gasco Food Institute. Note its many features as demonstrated. Then investigate the gas refrigerator further at The Gas Company. You, too, will be calling it the "Silent Star" of the modern kitchen.

CALLS PAROLE 'DEAL' FIGURES

Inmates, Including Two Whose Parents Talked to Parole 'Broker,' to Testify.

time for rule infractions and escape attempts.

He was sentenced from Summit county on a robbery charge, and was under a 10 to 25-year sentence.

Simon was received at the reformatory from Mahoning county nearly four years ago, in March 1934, sentenced to 10 to 25 years on a robbery charge. He has had 360 days added to his sentence, for rule infractions and escapes. Records show that after his transfer to the Grafton farm Nov. 3, 1936, he escaped on Aug. 14 of last year, but was recaptured the same day; his name had come up for parole consideration in April of 1937, but the parole board deferred consideration of it until next April.

Has Columbus Evidence.

Hurley has already outlined to the grand jury a transcript of the testimony given before the Franklin county grand jury by Mrs. Mary Simon, the inmate's mother.

Her story was that in 1935, a year after Naceb had been sent to the reformatory, she had called on Andy Marino, a brother of Roy (Happy) Marino, ex-Ohio pen convict, concerning the possibility of a parole for her son. She said that Andy told her to see Roy, that he arranged for such a meeting and that Roy told her to talk to Naylor, and arranged for that conference. She added that Nylor had told her he could obtain a parolefo r Naceb within 60 days for the payment of $300.

Mrs. Simon said she did not pay Naylor any money and that a year passed before she saw him again. Her testimony said that in 1936 Naylor's chauffeur came to her, told her Naylor was in Youngstown and that she again went to see him. But no further agreement was reached, she said

Harouff, now at Grafton honor camp, was expected to be brought back to Mansfield to testify before the jury.

He was sentenced to the reformatory July 3, 1931, from Summit county and has had a total of 840 days, more than two years, added to his sentence for rule infractions and escapes.

Records Tell of Escapes.

Records show that he escaped once from the Mansfield institution farm dormitory, once from the Grafton farm, and tried unsuccessfully to escape from the dormitory here another time.

His first escape occurred in October, 1933, but he was recaptured the same day. In September of 1934 he tried again to escape, but failed.

Transferred later to Grafton—reformatory records fail to show the exact date of transfer, he escaped from there Jan. 10, 1936, and was recaptured four days later. He has been at Grafton since that time

The same month he escaped, the parole board heard his parole application, and granted him a parole, to be effective July 1, 1938

Hurley will present to the grand jury evidence concerning a letter purported to have been written by Harouff's father J S Harouff, from Akron, to Naylor, indicating that he was ready to deal with Naylor to obtain the release of his son. The letter was dated July 1, 1937, six months after the parole board had granted the boy's parole.

Seek Records of Old Probe.

Hurley refused to comment today on a report that the grand jury had requested that records of a previous investigation of state welfare department institutions be turned over to it.

It had been reliably learned that the grand jury had asked, or would ask, that Municipal Judge Joseph N Ackerman of Cleveland turn over to it, records of an investigation he had conducted several years ago, when he was a state senator, and chairman of a special committee which conducted an investigation

At Cleveland, however, Ackerman said he had not received a request for such information.

Hears Mackey.

The jury spent all of Tuesday afternoon listening to the testimony of William K Mackey chaplain at the reformatory for the past seven years, and still performing the duties of chaplain although he assumed the post of general parole agent of Ohio on Jan 3

Mackey followed his predecessor, Rev. Louis A Sittler Columbus into the grand jury room and testified for more than two hours

Although the usual secrecy was maintained concerning his testimony—neither he nor Hurley would talk about what had transpired in the room it was learned that he had been questioned about the method employed in presenting inmates for parole and the routine by which it is determined that an inmate is eligible for consideration by the parole board.

Since the chaplain at the reformatory has perhaps a closer contact with inmates than another official due to the number of interviews he conducts both with incoming inmates and those who may have been charged with violation of rules of the institution, it was assumed that the grand jur had familiarized itself, through the testimony of Mackey and Rev Sittler with that part of parole routine.

Calls Bish, Corbett.

At the conclusion of the day's session, Hurley announced that he had summoned Bish, former guard, and Corbett, but would not state whe he expected to bring out from their testimony. Bish was at the reformatory for nine years He was appointed Aug 27, 1923 and resigned Nov. 22, 1932 Now a dairyman residing on a farm two miles east of Mansfield on the Lucas road, he was for a time in charge of reformatory farms, manned by trusties told newspapermen in Los Angeles Monday night of Anders' arrest and confession.

Hurley also revealed plans to question inmates, but would give no names, and said he expected to take the jury on a tour of the institution today.

Immediately after he conferred with newspapermen, Hoover disappeared. He was next seen at the local airport last night when a huge transport plane belonging to one of the transcontinental lines landed and taxied immediately into a hangar that had been prepared for it. In the plane was Hoover, his squad of G-men, and a prisoner. The plane had been so long out of Los Angeles that it could have easily flown hundreds of miles off the direct course—as far off the course in fact, as Tacoma, Wash

Resemblance Seen.

In Tacoma, investigators and all concerned with the investigation of the Mattson kidnaping were amazed by the resemblance of pictures of Anders and an artist's drawing of the Mattson "kidnapers" from the description of the only persons who saw him—the three children who were with Charles when he was abducted.

Dr. William W. Mattson denied that either Hoover or his prisoner had been in Tacoma The Federal Bureau of Investigation office there refused to make any comment.

There was no positive evidence that the prisoner brought here by Hoover and his men was Anders. E. T. Guinance, chief of Hoover's local office, first denied that there had been a prisoner at all, later admitted only to "a prisoner." A reporter for the St. Paul Daily News asked Hoover if the prisoner was Anders and he said that Hoover had replied, "Yes."

Hoover's explanation of his coming here instead of going directly to Chicago from Los Angeles and thus saving 350 miles, was

"I wanted to get some rest before getting into Chicago." He said he, his agents, and their prisoner would continue on to Chicago this morning.

The three children in Tacoma are the only persons who can identify the bearded man who stole Charles Mattson and would have collected $100,000 ransom had not investigators found the child's naked and violated body before the father could arrange payment

CHAPTER V.

A puzzled frown wrinkled Caradad's forehead with the news that the person at the other end of the wire was a Gerta Greenway. That name was utterly strange. "Yes?" she questioned.

"I hope that you will pardon the informality," the voice went on pleasantly. "I am a friend of Terry Cantine. He explained that you were spending a few days in the city and had no acquaintances here. I asked him if I might call you."

"Oh. Why...thank you! That is very kind."

Caradad instinctively warmed to the sound of that voice. It suggested culture and restraint—but friendliness. Its owner was speaking again.

"I am coming downtown this afternoon and was wondering if we might have tea together. If it is not perfectly convenient, we will postpone it to another time. But I should very much like to meet you."

"Of course!" Caradad exclaimed impulsively. "I will be very glad to."

"Then suppose I come to the hotel about four-thirty. Will that suit your afternoon plans?"

"Yes, indeed."

"Thank you very much."

"Thank you! Goodbye."

Caradad replaced the telephone on its stand and stood regarding it pensively. She felt just a little conscience-stricken.

Terry had been perfectly sincere in his suggestion that it would be more pleasant for her if she had some women acquaintances. And she repaid his kindness with an impression that she might not care for his friends. She hadn't meant to do that. It was just a fear that she herself might not "fit." A fear that she might make him a little uncomfortable. But he had lost no time in arranging for one of his women friends to call at the Rushmore. That was the old, impulsive Terry she used to know.

And Gerta Greenway sounded as though she might be a person of charm and poise. Caradad found herself wondering if the caller were a Miss or a Mrs. Greenway. She had called herself a friend of Terry—must be rather an intimate friend.

Caradad discovered suddenly that she was a little lonely, after all. Thousands of people everywhere she turned. Not a soul among them all to talk to, no one interested even in her existence. Except Terry, of course. And, for the first time, it occurred to her that she had no way of getting in touch with him if she needed him. Except by that roundabout Graham address.

The important thing at the moment was what to wear.

Traveling with one trunk, even a fair-sized one, meant a limited wardrobe. Clothes were not so important an item at home, where she had been quite busy to go out much, even had she been inclined to. And, since her father's death, she had avoided colors. Here was a problem that hadn't occurred to her before. For Terry's sake, if nothing else, she must present as attractive an appearance as possible before his friends.

Inspiration came with a survey of her little row of dresses hanging in the closet. After all, this was Chicago. It was time to test its resources.

Five minutes later, she gave a taxi driver the name of the most familiar department store on State street. Time was an important factor when one was out to purchase a gown to wear within a few hours.

An efficient saleswoman was displaying an assortment of suitable afternoon gowns almost before the somewhat breathless shopper outlined her desires. The two decided almost simultaneously upon a little black and white print as being in every way suited to the occasion.

Caradad regarded herself with a little glow of satisfaction when she saw her reflection in the long mirror. Even the little scar on her cheek warmed to the sight. There was, but one question in her mind. Perhaps the frilly white collar and cuffs were just a little too-transforming; perhaps she should choose something a bit plainer. Her saleswoman had a very capable air, in addition to her attractiveness, and the customer confided her perplexity. She was assured that the mode was perfectly correct for Caradad's situation. Moreover, the alterations needed were so slight that there was no question about delivery in ample time.

"I will have it sent over to your hotel by special messenger, if you wish, Miss."

"Then please do," Caradad requested.

She found her way to the restaurant and, while enjoying a salad and the sight of smartly dressed women at nearby tables, concluded that a new hat might be in order while waiting for the dress. The quest proved less easy than her first attempt, but she left the store carrying a box which held a small, black creation. Caradad told herself that she must try to duplicate the "tilt" that the painstaking demonstrator of millinery had assured her was necessary to obtain the desired effect.

The store was as good as its word and delivered the dress in time for Caradad to twist and turn in it, before the full-length mirror in her bathroom door, until she was satisfied as to its perfection, and there was ample time for experimenting with the new hat. The combination was most encouraging.

The more she thought over her meeting with Miss Greenway—she had settled it in her own mind that it was "Miss"—the more relieved she was that her new friend had suggested having tea. It would be an informal visit and infinitely easier than being presented to a group of Terry's friends at one time, subjected to a multitude of appraisals.

It was almost exactly four-thirty when the telephone sounded its muffled call. A lady asking for Miss Vardell.

Caradad's hospitable instincts very nearly resulted in a request to have the "lady" conducted to her suite, but a hasty second thought halted the invitaton. She had rather carefully given the impression to Terry that she was occupying a small room. There was no need for any one to know that Judge Pomphrette had decided otherwise. Instead, she advised that she would be down at once.

She no sooner was out of the elevator than her eyes fell upon a woman in a green dress, seated in a low chair not far from the desk. Caradad knew instinctively that this was her caller. Miss Greenway must have experienced the same sense of identification, for she rose to her feet and awaited Caradad's approach. There was a swift, mutual inspection.

Caradad saw a slender, erect figure in jade green. A hat of matching shade. And earrings. The pose was graceful and unstudied. Large dark eyes in a long, oval face. An attractive smile on the parted coral lips. The voice was instantly familiar, still pleasing in its tone.

"Miss Vardell, isn't it?"

"Yes—and this is Miss Greenway."

"That's very sweet of you, my dear." The newcomer laughed musically, extending her hand in frank greeting. "But I am Mrs. Greenway," she confessed. "Do sit down." She indicated a chair beside the one she had been occupying."

"Oh." Caradad seated herself in some confusion.

"You see, Miss Vardell, Terry was telling some of us about you last evening," Mrs. Greenway explained smilingly. "How you were like a little sister to him when he lived in his father's home. It sounded so delightful that I was anxious to meet you. And it was so quaint to hear him call you Dad! I think that is priceless. Terry is a dear. Isn't he?"

"I've known him all my life," Caradad stated, without committing herself to the expected agreement. She was distinctly puzzled. Mrs. Greenway mentioned being with Terry "last evening." She certainly had dined with Terry herself and had considered the evening rather completely accounted for when he left the Rushmore. Evidently, Terry's evening had not been over.

"That is what he told us," the caller went on. "And that he had not seen you since you grew up, really. He was so thrilled over finding you again, especially as it was such a complete surprise. I was thrilled myself and begged him for your address so that I might meet you, rather than wait for some formal occasion. I hope you don't mind."

"Of course not."

"I'm so glad it suits you to have tea...such a pleasant way to chat and become acquainted, I think. There is a quite attractive little place close by. In the next square, I believe. Would you like to stroll up that way now?"

"I think that would be very nice."

Mrs. Greenway led the way to the street, chatting easily. Caradad was able to contribute her share to the conversation and still have a further opportunity to observe her companion. Out here in the sunlight, she made several interesting discoveries. Mrs. Greenway's dark, shining hair was liberally streaked with gray and attractively bobbed. Also that her face was singularly youthful and her complexion flawless. She was not a beautiful woman, Caradad decided, but her perfect poise and charm of manner were undeniable. She somehow defied a satisfactory description. Later, whenever Caradad heard the word "thoroughbred" applied to a person, she instinctively pictured Gerta Greenway.

In the comparatively quiet atmosphere of the smart little tearoom, Caradad found herself perfectly at ease. She followed the tactful leads of her new friend and spoke of herself without reserve. Her life at Farrabow. Something of the changes there. Of Judge Pomphrette and his wife. Of her recent trip. Interested and sympathetic, it was Mrs. Greenway who swung the conversation back on Terry Cantine.

"I'm ever so fond of him," she told Caradad with engaging frankness, lighting a cigaret for herself after the younger woman had declined to accept one. "He really is a dear—so active and ambitious. His ability to make friends is nothing short of marvelous. But you have known him so long it is unnecessary for me to dwell upon his charms," she added with her musical little laugh.

"He always has been popular, I think."

Caradad's response was not marked by enthusiasm. She was impressed by something in Mrs. Greenway's voice, a fleeting expression in her dark eyes, when she said she was fond of Terry. He probably was a close friend of the Greenway family — of Mr. Greenway. They were interested in his career, wanted to see him succeed. Terry had spoken warmly of his Chicago friends.

Mrs. Greenway blew a delicate thread of smoke from her carmined lips. Her eyes were half closed; there was a musing quality in her next words.

"Terry's good looks and his popularity are his best assets and his worst. They mean everything to him, or should."

You mean in—selling?" Caradad ventured. She would not ask any direct questions regarding Terry's business, but she hoped that some information might be forthcoming.

"Of course. He probably has told you all about his work. But he might be too modest to admit that he could be one of the most successful young business men in the city if—just one of those situations that have overtaken so many of us these past few years. Mere existence becomes a sordid affair at times." She hesitated and her dark eyes scrutinized Caradad's face. "If Terry ever has the misfortune to fall in love with the wrong woman . . . it's the end. Of Terry."

DANGEROUS

It is dangerous to sell a SUBSTITUTE for 666 just to make three or four cents more. Customers are your best assets; lose them and you lose your business. 666 is worth three or four times as much as a SUBSTITUTE.

HELP STOMACH DIGEST FOOD
Without Laxatives—and You'll Eat Everything from Soup to Nuts

The stomach should digest two pounds of food daily. When you eat heavy, greasy, coarse or rich foods or when you are nervous, hurried or chew poorly—your stomach pours out too much fluid. Your food doesn't digest and you have gas, heartburn, nausea, pain or sour stomach. You feel sour, sick and upset all over.

Doctors say never take a laxative for stomach pain. It is dangerous and foolish. It takes those little black tablets called Bell-ans for Indigestion to make the excess stomach fluids harmless, relieve distress in 5 minutes and put you back on your feet. Relief is so quick it is amazing and one 25c package proves it. Ask for Bell-ans for Indigestion.

CALLS PAROLE 'DEAL' FIGURES

Inmates, Including Two Whose Parents Talked to Parole 'Broker,' to Testify.

time for rule infractions and escape attempts.

He was sentenced from Summit county on a robbery charge, and was under a 10 to 25-year sentence.

Simon was received at the reformatory from Mahoning county nearly four years ago, in March 1934, sentenced to 10 to 25 years on a robbery charge. He has had 360 days added to his sentence, for rule infractions and escapes. Records show that after his transfer to the Grafton farm Nov. 3, 1936, he escaped on Aug. 14 of last year, but was recaptured the same day; his name had come up for parole consideration in April of 1937, but the parole board deferred consideration of it until next April.

Has Columbus Evidence.

Hurley has already outlined to the grand jury a transcript of the testimony given before the Franklin county grand jury by Mrs. Mary Simon, the inmate's mother.

Her story was that in 1935, a year after Naceb had been sent to the reformatory, she had called on Andy Marino, a brother of Roy (Happy) Marino, ex-Ohio penconvict, concerning the possibility of a parole for her son She said that Andy told her to see Roy, that he arranged for such a meeting and that Roy told her to talk to Naylor, and arranged for that conference. She added that Nylor had told her he could obtain a parolefo r Naceb within 60 days for the payment of $300.

Mrs. Simon said she did not pay Naylor any money and that a year passed before she saw him again. Her testimony said that in 1936 Naylor's chauffeur came to her, told her Naylor was in Youngstown and that she again went to see him. But no further agreement was reached, she said

Harouff, now at Grafton honor camp, was expected to be brought back to Mansfield to testify before the jury.

He was sentenced to the reformatory July 3, 1931, from Summit county and has had a total of 840 days, more than two years, added to his sentence for rule infractions and escapes.

Records Tell of Escapes.

Records show that he escaped once from the Mansfield institution farm dormitory, once from the Grafton farm, and tried unsuccessfully to escape from the dormitory here another time.

His first escape occurred in October, 1933, but he was recaptured the same day. In September of 1934 he tried again to escape, but failed.

Transferred later to Grafton—reformatory records fail to show the exact date of transfer, he escaped from there Jan. 10, 1936, and was recaptured four days later. He has been at Grafton since that time.

The same month he escaped, the parole board heard his parole application, and granted him a parole, to be effective July 1, 1938.

Hurley will present to the grand jury evidence concerning a letter purported to have been written by Harouff's father, J S Harouff, from Akron, to Naylor indicating that he was ready to deal with Naylor to obtain the release of his son The letter was dated July 1, 1937, six months after the parole board had granted the boy's parole

Seek Records of Old Probe.

Hurley refused to comment today on a report that the grand jury had requested that records of a previous investigation of state welfare department institutions be turned over to it.

It had been reliably learned that the grand jury had asked or would ask, that Municipal Judge Joseph N Ackerman of Cleveland turn over to it, records of an investigation he had conducted several years ago, when he was a state senator, and chairman of a special committee which conducted an investigation

At Cleveland, however, Ackerman said he had not received a request for such information.

Hears Mackey.

The jury spent all of Tuesday afternoon listening to the testimony of William K Mackey chaplain at the reformatory for the past seven years, and still performing the duties of chaplain although he assumed the post of general parole agent of Ohio on Jan 3.

Mackey followed his predecessor, Rev. Louis A Sittler, Columbus, into the grand jury room and testified for more than two hours

Although the usual secrecy was maintained concerning his testimony—neither he nor Hurley would talk about what had transpired in the room it was learned that he had been questioned about the method employed in presenting inmates for parole and the routine by which it is determined that an inmate is eligible for consideration by the parole board

Since the chaplain at the reformatory has perhaps a closer contact with inmates than another official, due to the number of interviews he conducts both with incoming inmates and those who may have been charged with violation of rules of the institution, it was assumed that the grand jury had familiarized itself, through the testimony of Mackey and Rev Sittler with that part of parole routine

Calls Bish, Corbett.

At the conclusion of the day's session, Hurley announced that he had summoned Bish, former guard, and Corbett, but would not state whe he expected to bring out from their testimony. Bish was at the reformatory for nine years. He was appointed Aug 27, 1923 and resigned Nov 22, 1932 Now a dairyman residing on a farm two miles east of Mansfield on the Lucas road, he was for a time in charge of reformatory farms, manned by trusties

Hurley also revealed plans to question inmates, but would give no names, and said he expected to take the jury on a tour of the institution today.

G-Men, Armed With Digging Tools, Leave St. Paul After Mystery Plane Trip.

told newspapermen in Los Angeles Monday night of Anders' arrest and confession.

Immediately after he conferred with newspapermen, Hoover disappeared. He was next seen at the local airport last night when a huge transport plane belonging to one of the transcontinental lines landed and taxied immediately into a hangar that had been prepared for it. In the plane was Hoover, his squad of G-men, and a prisoner. The plane had been so long out of Los Angeles that it could have easily flown hundreds of miles off the direct course—as far off the course in fact, as Tacoma, Wash

Resemblance Seen.

In Tacoma, investigators and all concerned with the investigation of the Mattson kidnaping were amazed by the resemblance of pictures of Anders and an artist's drawing of the Mattson "kidnapers" from the description of the only persons who saw him—the three children who were with Charles when he was abducted.

Dr. William W Mattson denied that either Hoover or his prisoner had been in Tacoma The Federal Bureau of Investigation office there refused to make any comment

There was no positive evidence that the prisoner brought here by Hoover and his men was Anders. E. T. Guinance, chief of Hoover's local office, first denied that there had been a prisoner at all, later admitted only to "a prisoner." A reporter for the St. Paul Daily News asked Hoover if the prisoner was Anders and he said that Hoover had replied, "Yes."

Hoover's explanation of his coming here instead of going directly to Chicago from Los Angeles and thus saving 350 miles, was

"I wanted to get some rest before getting into Chicago." He said he, his agents, and their prisoner would continue on to Chicago this morning.

The three children in Tacoma are the only persons who can identify the bearded man who stole Charles Mattson and would have collected $100,000 ransom had not investigators found the child's naked and violated body before the father could arrange payment

Carl Fernyak, secretary of the Mansfield club was also present and spoke briefly. Poling spoke on "Anniversaries" and recalled that this year was the 17th anniversary of the Galion club which the Mansfield club helped to organize.

Other visitors present were Lynn A. Curtiss of Toledo, and N. I. Videon of Bellevue.

CHAPTER V.

A puzzled frown wrinkled Caradad's forehead with the news that the person at the other end of the wire was a Gerta Greenway. That name was utterly strange. "Yes?" she questioned.

"I hope that you will pardon the informality," the voice went on pleasantly. "I am a friend of Terry Cantine. He explained that you were spending a few days in the city and had no acquaintances here. I asked him if I might call you."

"Oh. Why...thank you! That is very kind."

Caradad instinctively warmed to the sound of that voice. It suggested culture and restraint—but friendliness. Its owner was speaking again.

"I am coming downtown this afternoon and was wondering if we might have tea together. If it is not perfectly convenient, we will postpone it to another time. But I should very much like to meet you."

"Of course!" Caradad exclaimed impulsively. "I will be very glad to."

"Then suppose I come to the hotel about four-thirty. Will that suit your afternoon plans?"

"Yes, indeed."

"Thank you very much."

"Thank you! Goodbye."

Caradad replaced the telephone on its stand and stood regarding it pensively. She felt just a little conscience-stricken.

Terry had been perfectly sincere in his suggestion that it would be more pleasant for her if she had some women acquaintances. And she repaid his kindness with an impression that she might not care for his friends. She hadn't meant to do that. It was just a fear that she herself might not "fit." A fear that she might make him a little uncomfortable. But he had lost no time in arranging for one of his women friends to call at the Rushmore. That was the old, impulsive Terry she used to know.

And Gerta Greenway sounded as though she might be a person of charm and poise. Caradad found herself wondering if the caller were a Miss or a Mrs. Greenway. She had called herself a friend of Terry—must be rather an intimate friend.

Caradad discovered suddenly that she was a little lonely, after all. Thousands of people everywhere she turned. Not a soul among them all to talk to, no one interested even in her existence. Except Terry, of course. And, for the first time, it occurred to her that she had no way of getting in touch with him if she needed him. Except by that roundabout Graham address.

The important thing at the moment was what to wear.

Traveling with one trunk, even a fair-sized one, meant a limited wardrobe. Clothes were not so important an item at home, where she had been quite busy to go out much, even had she been inclined to. And, since her father's death, she had avoided colors. Here was a problem that hadn't occurred to her before. For Terry's sake, if nothing else, she must present as attractive an appearance as possible before his friends.

Inspiration came with a survey of her little row of dresses hanging in the closet. After all, this was Chicago. It was time to test its resources.

Five minutes later, she gave a taxi driver the name of the most familiar department store on State street. Time was an important factor when one was out to purchase a gown to wear within a few hours.

An efficient saleswoman was displaying an assortment of suitable afternoon gowns almost before the somewhat breathless shopper outlined her desires. The two decided almost simultaneously upon a little black and white print as being in every way suited to the occasion.

Caradad regarded herself with a little glow of satisfaction when she saw her reflection in the long mirror. Even the little scar on her cheek warmed to the sight. There was, but one question in her mind. Perhaps the frilly white collar and cuffs were just a little too-transforming; perhaps she should choose something a bit plainer. Her saleswoman had a very capable air, in addition to her attractiveness, and the customer confided her perplexity. She was assured that the mode was perfectly correct for Caradad's situation. Moreover, the alterations needed were so slight that there was no question about delivery in ample time.

"I will have it sent over to your hotel by special messenger, if you wish, Miss."

"Then please do" Caradad requested.

She found her way to the restaurant and, while enjoying a salad and the sight of smartly dressed women at nearby tables, concluded that a new hat might be in order while waiting for the dress. The quest proved less easy than her first attempt, but she left the store carrying a box which held a small, black creation. Caradad told herself that she must try to duplicate the "tilt" that the painstaking demonstrator of millinery had assured her was necessary to obtain the desired effect.

The store was as good as its word and delivered the dress in time for Caradad to twist and turn in it, before the full-length mirror in her bathroom door, until she was satisfied as to its perfection, and there was ample time for experimenting with the new hat. The combination was most encouraging.

The more she thought over her meeting with Miss Greenway—she had settled it in her own mind that it was "Miss"—the more relieved she was that her new friend had suggested having tea. It would be an informal visit and infinitely easier than being presented to a group of Terry's friends at one time, subjected to a multitude of appraisals.

It was almost exactly four-thirty when the telephone sounded its muffled call. A lady asking for Miss Vardell.

Caradad's hospitable instincts very nearly resulted in a request to have the "lady" conducted to her suite, but a hasty second thought halted the invitaton. She had rather carefully given the impression to Terry that she was occupying a small room. There was no need for any one to know that Judge Pomphrette had decided otherwise. Instead, she advised that she would be down at once.

She no sooner was out of the elevator than her eyes fell upon a woman in a green dress, seated in a low chair not far from the desk. Caradad knew instinctively that this was her caller. Miss Greenway must have experienced the same sense of identification, for she rose to her feet and awaited Caradad's approach. There was a swift, mutual inspection.

Caradad saw a slender, erect figure in jade green. A hat of matching shade. And earrings. The pose was graceful and unstudied. Large dark eyes in a long, oval face. An attractive smile on the painted coral lips. The voice was instantly familiar, still pleasing in its tone.

"Miss Vardell, isn't it?"

"Yes—and this is Miss Greenway."

"That's very sweet of you, my dear." The newcomer laughed musically, extending her hand in frank greeting. "But I am Mrs. Greenway," she confessed. "Do sit down." She indicated a chair beside the one she had been occupying."

"Oh." Caradad seated herself in some confusion.

"You see, Miss Vardell, Terry was telling some of us about you last evening," Mrs. Greenway explained smilingly. "How you were like a little sister to him when he lived in his father's home. It sounded so delightful that I was anxious to meet you. And it was so quaint to hear him call you Dad! I think that is priceless. Terry is a dear. Isn't he?"

"I've known him all my life." Caradad stated, without committing herself to the expected agreement. She was distinctly puzzled. Mrs. Greenway mentioned being with Terry "last evening." She certainly had dined with Terry herself and had considered the evening rather completely accounted for when he left the Rushmore. Evidently, Terry's evening had not been over

"That is what he told us," the caller went on. "And that he had not seen you since you grew up, really. He was so thrilled over finding you again, especially as it was such a complete surprise. I was thrilled myself and begged him for your address so that I might meet you, rather than wait for some formal occasion. I hope you don't mind."

"Of course not."

"I'm so glad it suits you to have tea...such a pleasant way to chat and become acquainted, I think. There is a quite attractive little place close by. In the next square, I believe. Would you like to stroll up that way now?"

"I think that would be very nice."

Mrs. Greenway led the way to the street, chatting easily. Caradad was able to contribute her share to the conversation and still have a further opportunity to observe her companion. Out here in the sunlight, she made several interesting discoveries. Mrs. Greenway's dark, shining hair was liberally streaked with gray and attractively bobbed. Also that her face was singularly youthful and her complexion flawless. She was not a beautiful woman, Caradad decided, but her perfect poise and charm of manner were undeniable. She somehow defied a satisfactory description. Later, whenever Caradad heard the word "thoroughbred" applied to a person, she instinctively pictured Gerta Greenway.

In the comparatively quiet atmosphere of the smart little tearoom, Caradad found herself perfectly at ease. She followed the tactful leads of her new friend and spoke of herself without reserve. Her life at Farrabow. Something of the changes there. Of Judge Pomphrette and his wife. Of her recent trip. Interested and sympathetic, it was Mrs. Greenway who swung the conversation back on Terry Cantine.

"I'm ever so fond of him," she told Caradad with engaging frankness, lighting a cigaret for herself after the younger woman had declined to accept one. "He really is a dear—so active and ambitious. His ability to make friends is nothing short of marvelous. But you have known him so long it is unnecessary for me to dwell upon his charms," she added with her musical little laugh.

"He always has been popular, I think."

Caradad's response was not marked by enthusiasm. She was impressed by something in Mrs. Greenway's voice, a fleeting expression in her dark eyes, when she said she was fond of Terry. He probably was a close friend of the Greenway family—of Mr. Greenway. They were interested in his career, wanted to see him succeed. Terry had spoken warmly of his Chicago friends.

Mrs Greenway blew a delicate thread of smoke from her carmined lips. Her eyes were half closed; there was a musing quality in her next words.

"Terry's good looks and his popularity are his best assets and his worst. They mean everything to him, or should."

You mean in—selling?" Caradad ventured. She would not ask any direct questions regarding Terry's business, but she hoped that some information might be forthcoming.

"Of course. He probably has told you all about his work. But he might be too modest to admit that he could be one of the most successful young business men in the city if—just one of those situations that have overtaken so many of us these past few years. Mere existence becomes a sordid affair at times . . ." She hesitated and her dark eyes scrutinized Caradad's face. "If Terry ever has the misfortune to fall in love with the wrong woman . . . it's the end. Of Terry."

HELP STOMACH DIGEST FOOD

Without Laxatives—and You'll Eat Everything from Soup to Nuts

The stomach should digest two pounds of food daily. When you eat heavy, greasy, coarse or rich foods or when you are nervous, hurried or chew poorly—your stomach pours out too much fluid. Your food doesn't digest and you have gas, heartburn, nausea, pain or sour stomach. You feel sour, sick and upset all over.

Doctors say never take a laxative for stomach pain. It is dangerous and foolish. It takes those little black tablets called Bell-ans for indigestion to make the excess stomach fluids harmless, relieve distress in 5 minutes and put you back on your feet. Relief is so quick it is amazing and one 25c package proves it. Ask for Bell-ans for Indigestion.

DANGEROUS

It is dangerous to sell a SUBSTITUTE for 666 just to make three or four cents more. Customers are your best assets; lose them and you lose your business. 666 is worth three or four times as much as a SUBSTITUTE.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1938.

The peak of a recession would probably be the foothill of a depression.

J. Edgar Hoover said recently: "Crime begins in the home"—also indolence, extravagance and dependence.

Ruled from the air, it is difficult to understand why Mae West's stuff should be considered any more palatable on the screen.

Danger In Capital Consumption.

OUTSTANDING characteristic of the United States government, and the country at large, is the growing tendency to live in the present and ignore tomorrow.

For nearly ten years the federal government has spent $2 for every $1 received in revenue. Expenditures are climbing steadily.

In the name of social security, the government taxes the pay envelopes of wage earners, then immediately expends the funds thus derived for present needs of government itself—instead of holding them in trust for the future needs of the nation's workers. The future is left to shift for itself.

This is what the economists call "capital consumption." As the New York Times points out: "Liberal economists hold that progressive capital formation is the chief way by which the position of the great mass of the workers can be permanently improved. Capital consumption is the reverse of this process."

Capital consumption leads directly to chaos and misery for all.

Scholarship Awards.

THERE has been some complaint about college scholarships in this country in recent years. Too many of them, it was said, were going to young people whose education did not depend upon their own efforts. Other boys and girls, equally intelligent and well fitted for college, who could not go on without financial help, were deprived of the opportunity. Whether or not there was solid basis for this criticism, an outsider does not know. The purposes of scholarships may vary, too, some being intended for needy students and others intended wholly to promote special study and research, regardless of the financial condition of the student.

A couple of high school students in one college community settled the problem unselfishly in their own cases. They had successfully met all the requirements for two scholarships for entering the midterm freshman class. The awards were given them. Then the two boys waived the honor and the assistance. They said they could manage without that help and thought it ought to be given to classmates who could not.

The younger generation, sometimes called thoughtless and selfish, often refutes criticism by just such fine behavior.

Discouraging Accident Racketeers.

JUST two hours after a little girl had been hit by a truck in Brooklyn, two men were arrested in a trap laid for them at her father's home, on the charge of soliciting accident cases, a misdemeanor under the New York penal code.

This is another victory for the Brooklyn Rackets Bureau's investigation of ambulance chasing, and has brought the number of arrests to seventeen. The claim bureau of the Association of Casualty and Surety Executives is co-operating with the Brooklyn authorities in the investigation.

Ambulance chasing, claim frauds and faked claims constitute a group of common crimes which affect every citizen, and strike at the pocketbooks of every insurance policyholder. In the New York area, signal success has been achieved in apprehending and punishing these wolves who often prey on the poor and ignorant. Large organizations, staffed with crooked doctors and lawyers, have been uncovered and the principals sent to prison for long terms. These organizations have cheated insurance companies out of millions a year—a graft which is financially reflected in the cost of all casualty insurance, inasmuch as the amount of claims the industry must pay is what determines the annual cost of the policies it issues.

All other cities, towns and states would do well to emulate New York's example and carry on a determined war on accident racketeers. The cost of this work is microscopic in comparison to the savings to the public which follow—to say nothing of the public service rendered in stamping out all kinds of crime. The ambulance chaser and the claim fraud crook deserve no mercy.

Promoting Vegetable Growth.

NOT only is artificial light used now to make hens lay more eggs, but to increase vegetable production. It is applied now with surprising success in some of the northern states, with greenhouse tomatoes. A horticulturist tells of one suburban area, having an unusual development of winter vegetable production, that has increased the tomato yield nearly 3,000 baskets an acre by this means. Electric lights are turned on about 5 p. m. this time of year, and off at 7 to give the plants a reasonable night's sleep, then on again from 5 a. m. till daylight.

This procedure makes use of a principle that Nature has been using for millions of years. The agricultural regions of the Far North, the Canadian wheat fields of the Northwest, for example, have a short summer but long summer days. With only four or five hours of darkness in the growing season, they can do about as well as our wheat states much farther south.

Migrating birds, scientists have discovered, make use of the same principle.

A disturbing thought is that eventual listing of those Sixty Families will probably reveal some Roosevelt in-laws.

Someone recalls that Sing Sing is not only an odd name for a prison but that it also has its own Lawes.

Garbo says "the idea of marrying Leopold Stokowski is idiotic"—but isn't that dodging the question?

Some folks think that public interest in "Gone With the Wind" will eventually blow over.

It now appears that holding companies will soon be left holding nothing but the bag.

"YOU SEE!—DEMOCRACY DOESN'T WORK!"

Japan's 'Peace Terms' Remindful of Germany's

—By CHARLES P. STEWART

WASHINGTON—In early 1916 I was in Germany. We were not in the World war then, and, because I was a newspaperman, the Germans thought I might have a little publicity value. Some very influential folk among them talked quite freely to me, including some quite prominent military individuals, who might reasonably have been expected to be extremely belligerent. They were not, however. One and all, they expressed the most fervent wishes for an end of the conflict.

They meant what they said, too.

Naturally they did. Up to that stage of the game they were winners. If they could have persuaded the allies to admit, right then, that they were licked, thus stopping the conflict, the Fatherland could have called itself victorious. It would not have realized quite all its ambitions, but it would have made substantial gains, anyway. Its strategists, genuinely wanted to "take their profits," such as they were, at that juncture, rather than go on fighting. I think they would have made what they considered fairly moderate terms, in comparison with their original ideas, if they could have induced the allies to listen to them.

BUT AMONG THE ALLIES—

Subsequently I traveled on into England and France.

It was in these countries that I found the bellicose crowds. They WERE semi-beaten, and they knew it, but they did not propose to STAY beaten. Due to the same conditions that made the Germans anxious to end the slaughter the English and French were determined to keep at it.

"Don't run a street car after you've caught it," is the pursuer's motto.

"Ah, but you haven't quite caught up yet, even though you may be gaining; so I'm going to keep on speeding," is the street car's sentiment.

As we are aware, the furiously fleeting allied street car finally out-distanced the German would-be passenger, leaving the latter in a heck of a state of exhaustion.

JAPAN'S POSITION?

Japan, in China, is in much the same fix that Germany was in, in early 1916, versus the allies.

The mikado has won on the Asiatic mainland, but he cannot STAY victorious.

The more he wins the more territory he has to continue to keep subjugated, and the harder and more expensive it is for him to do it.

A COMPARISON

We can visualize, here at home what such a campaign might be like.

Suppose Uncle Sam were to undertake to assimilate Mexico. Uncle Samuel would win, it goes without saying, in every encounter with Mexican troops. Oh, we would be vicitorious on paper.

But when we took the job of policing a hostile Mexico?

It would take 1,000,000 troops, at the least calculation. And I have consulted United States army officers on the subject.

A STEWART ANALOGY

Still, the United States conceivably could police Mexico.

But could Mexico conquer and police the United States? How funny!

Well, it's comparable to the thought that Japan can do it to China. China?—with a half a billion inhabitants. Japan?—with much less than one-fifth that many. China?—with illimitable natural resources. Japan?—a few little volcanic islands.

Mexico couldn't have any outside friends against the United States, either.

China? Because of interests of their own, the U. S. A. is its friend—and Britain and France and Holland. More particularly is Russia its friend—because of the Soviet's hostility to the mikado.

JAPAN'S REASON?

Here is a pretty strong potential lineup against Japan—if it is consolidated.

It is not surprising that Tokio is prepared to make terms with the Chinese.

To date Japan is winner.

Can it "get away with it?"

Germany, in early 1916, could not. Japan is trying to. It is offering peace terms—like Germany's, 22 years ago.

Is Sacrifice a Blessing or Blight?

THIS business of sacrificing our lives for others—what do you think of it? Is it blessed and beautiful . . . or a crime against nature? And should we be honored for doing it . . . or allowed to stew in our own juice?

Lorella wants to know—and her letter speaks for thousands in the same predicament.

The story's typical. A death-bed promise to her dying mother that she'd care for her baby brother. Then Lorella left High School to make a home for her father and Baby Ted—only to shortly take up the bread-winner's problem when her father died.

Not so hard at first. She was young and full of dreams herself. And there was her own lover to help her watch and plan. Some day soon, when Ted was a little older, they'd marry....

Then, suddenly, Ted was older ...was married young himself... was standing beside a dead young wife and a new-born baby. So, for Lorella, the trail began again. First Ted—now the baby. Would her own time never come? Her lover's eyes were growing weary.

And then again Ted married. But the new wife "didn't want another woman's child."

"The kid'll be better with you anyway, Sis," said Ted—and went his way. And the lover went likewise, grown indifferent at last, to marry a more eager mate.

Tears, then...such agonies of love-starved tears in the lonely nights. But the boy was a joy. And it was warming to hear them say, "Hasn't Lorella Wayne been wonderful! A perfect saint!" So the years passed with her life folding, closer and closer, about the boy. And then, as suddenly as his father he too married...went his thoughtless, happy way.

And now Lorella's crying out the rancor of the cheated years. "It isn't fair! I did my best...gave all I had...and what have I gotten in return? Nothing....no thanks. ..no appreciation....just selfish, cold forgetfulness. Taking everything...and now no one cares what happens to me! Yet they say that goodnes pays! But it doesn't —it doesn't.

The old universal cry. The cry of parents over spoiled, ungrateful children...of wives who have thrown their lives away for weakling husbands...of fine men tricked by worthless wives. Everything gone at last—and then the bitter cry that "goodness doesn't pay!"

BUT IS SUCH SACRIFICE "GOODNESS"? I don't believe it is.

Sacrifice, within healthy limits, is a beautiful and gallant thing... a necessary discipline for fine character. But when it passes those limits, when it robs the Giver and makes a bum of the Getter, it becomes a blight.

WE DO HAVE A DUTY TO HUMANITY....BUT THAT DUTY BEGINS WITH OURSELVES. EACH ONE OF US HAS A SACRED MISSION...TO BECOME HIS OWN BEST AND MOST USEFUL SELF. AND THE PERSON WHO VIOLATES THAT MISSION IS AS TRULY A CRIMINAL AS ANY THIEF OR MURDERER — AND GETS JUST ABOUT AS MUCH APPRECIATION IN THE END.

Lorella isn't a mistreated martyr. She's a plain quitter, who is getting her due. Her life wasn't broken because her mother bound her or her brother failed her. It was broken because Lorella herself didn't safeguard it. If we don't proclaim and protect our own rights, no one else will or should.

There is always a point in sacrifice where we can do our duty to ourselves, as well as to the other fellow, if we'll just admit it. Lorella's duty to her brother ceased when he became a man. Right then she should have forced Ted to assume his own responsibility—and made a life for herself.

BUT SACRIFICE IS A HABIT-FORMING DRUG WHICH BOTH BINDS AND BLINDS US. Nine times out of ten such "nobility" is an unconscious mask for self-righteous egotism — the will-to-power—or plain snoopiness.

Beware of playing God. He's quite able to do that job himself. All He asks of each of us is to make as useful a citizen as possible out of Exhibit A.

Keeping Step

—By LESLIE EICHEL—

New Supreme Court Appointees.

WILL the new appointees to the supreme court keep up with the changing world? The liberals of today are the conservatives of tomorrow—and the court does not change except through pressure or death.

When President Wilson "kicked" the then attorney general, James C. McReynolds, up into the supreme court nearly a quarter of a century ago, did he realize he was adding a man who would be termed the "most reactionary" on the supreme bench? He could not have believed so, nor could Mr. McReynolds himself at that time. The court has a peculiar effect on a man, of solidifying him into the age of his appointment; and there he remains as the world moves on and on.

That does not occur to all men. It has not occurred to Justice Brandeis, for one. It did not occur to the late Justice Holmes. They, however, have been the exception—they have been "more than human."

What will Justice Black be 25 years from now? And Justice Reed? And any other justices President Roosevelt may name?

Or will justices automatically be retired (by constitutional amendment) by that time?

For the present, history teaches us one thing: That the "Roosevelt" choices will not automatically provide presidential successors more liberal than "F. D. R." and assurance that the court will approve their measures. McReynolds, a Wilson appointee, never has voted "yes" once on a New Deal measure.

LOWER COURTS

Nor is there any assurance that federal judges named by President Roosevelt will approve post-New Deal liberal measures.

After all, the majority of appointments made to the lower federal courts are political. A number of congressmen recently have been "rewarded." It is doubtful whether genuine liberals have been recommended for these life-long judgeships.

A district judge is largely a power unto himself, and can exert it to the detriment of humanity and government for quite a while prior to being checked.

The extension of TVA power to various communities, the grant of government funds to cities to build their own power plants were held up for two years by lower federal court injunctions. Then the supreme court upset the lower courts. But it took the government two years to obtain a hearing and a decision from the high court.

WHO IS WRONG?

Recently, Justice Van Devanter has come out of retirement to sit as a trial district judge in federal court in New York City, to help clean up the docket.

The New York papers have followed his procedure daily, usually with more than a column of type. These are conservative papers, and yet their writeups have been in a mildly sarcastic, amused air. They picture prosecutors and lawyers bewildered by the procedure of this judge, who seems to follow no rules as laid down by other judges and lawyers. The justice terms the rules as wrong and foolish, and he stops lawyers from brow-beating witnesses and he tells the jury what his opinions are—and generally "shocks" the lawyers on both sides of the "fence."

Now, somebody is wrong. As one noted criminal lawyer exclaimed when bewildered over what seemed to him a strange ruling, "He can't be wrong — he comes from the very fountainhead."

For my part, I believe Justice Van Devanter is correct. Free from the mustiness of the supreme court and out in the open again, he is trying to cut the cobwebs. But if he had not been a conservative supreme court justice for many years, lawyers now would be attacking him as "destroying the courts," etc. As it is, they attribute the actions of the justice to his old age. (He will be 78 on April 17. And that is quite a musty old age in the average person.)

It might have been better for supreme court defenders, if one of its justices had not descended from on high to find a way in the hurly-burly of life again. For gods who walk the muddy paths of the ordinary man find that they themselves have feet of clay.

Air Travel Insurance.

Comforting figures for those who may be prejudiced against air travel because of the number of spectacular accidents to skyliners last year are those recently released by the Air Transport Association of America, relating to insurance rates for air passengers.

Four companies recently announced that they would issue policies in the amount of $5,000 for four hours' flying time at a premium of 25c. In other words, actuarial figures place the chance of accident at 20,000 to one.

Since the ordinary casualty insurance rates for persons traveling by train or boat or other surface carriers is around 25c for 24 hours for $5,000 it is seen that, considering the difference in speed, the rate is about the same for the number of miles covered.—Columbus Dispatch.

Sitting In On a Filibuster.

WASHINGTON—This little playlet is entitled "Much Ado About Nothing, or A Day In the Life of a Filibuster."

Scene: The senate chamber. A dozen senators are sitting about, maybe two dozen at times, some listening, some drowsing, some signing letters, some just sitting. The senate is debating the anti-lynching bill.

Red-and-white whiskered Senator Lewis of Illinois has just proposed to remove a paragraph which exempts gangsters and labor demonstrators from the grip of the bill. The argument seems to be that the bill exempts gangsters or labor demonstrators without the need of saying so in a special paragraph.

Pro and Con

SENATOR LEWIS: "Mr. President, I have moved to strike out of the bill the provision I have read touching the question of exempting gangsters from the provision of the bill, and also those involved in labor disputes."

Senator Barkley of Kentucky: "I do not believe there has been any criticism of the wording which would eliminate labor disputes."

Senator Lewis: "Mr. President, I am pleased to inform the distinguished leader, the senator from Kentucky, that I am informed by the senator from New York (Mr. Wagner) that upon information from sources, it is both desired and consented to that this reference to labor disputes be eliminated. I do not know for whom he speaks, but of course, I take his word."

Senator Connally of Texas: (Note—He hates the anti-lynching bill as an offense against southern state sovereignty) "Would the senator from Illinois mind telling me who these mysterious, occult, insidious, and influential interests are which are dominating the senate without disclosure of who they are or where they are from?"

Lewis: "I have none of that occult power to detect such influences. I am compelled to say my information is from the two senators, Mr. Van Nuys of Indiana and Mr. Wagner of New York, who, I assume, have had their information from a proper and legitimate source."

Connally: The senator from Illinois ought to unmask himself (laughter), legislatively at least, and tell us who it is who can pull a string in some dark chamber in the city and immediately have the senator from Illinois pop up in his place in the senate and modify his amendment."

Lewis: "I have never met them: no such influences have approached me. . . . . I say to the senator from Texas that I represent the city of Chicago and this particular provision reflects on Chicago."

Some Senatorial Wit

CONNALLY: "If there is any reflection on the senator's constitutents, it is simply because he recognizes that the bill under its terms would cover more gangsters and more racketeers in Illionis and Chicago than in any other place. (Laughter).

Lewis: "Mr. President, I must say that it has been reported that bands have passed through my city, though they have come from other sections of the country, some of them poorly endowed by their birth, as was disclosed at the time they were being hung in my community." (Laughter).

Senator Dieterich of Illinois: "The original bill contained a provision that the county itself in which the lynching took place should be responsible to the amount of $10,000 to the legal representatives of the person who met his death by violence. In case gangsters should take their victim to a certain county, we do not want the legal representatives or the wives of those gangsters to have an action against such county for $10,000. The text of the bill has been materially changed until that language is no longer necessary." (And so on, far into the night.)

How It Started

—By JEAN NEWTON

Stigma.

"Sticks and stones break my bones But names will never harm me."

In the beginning, however, it was different.

To-day, when a person is stigmatized—that is, called a hypocrite, a scoundrel or otherwise reproachfully characterized—if pain is suffered at all, it is moral pain, usually of short duration and frequently of even shorter memory.

Among the Greeks and Romans, however, to be stigmatized was quite another matter.

Then, a stigma was a mark impressed upon one with a pointed instrument—or a red-hot iron; it was a brand identifying a slave, a criminal, a chattel or cattle.

When this sort of thing was no longer practiced except on the range, "stigma" became a purely figurative term, its role relegated to politics and courts.

The word "stigma" is derived from the Greek verb signifying "to prick."

Before We Know.

The hot, bright years pass quickly, leave
Us breathless in their wake.
Before we have had time to count
Them, swiftly passing, make

Deduction of their story, or
What it was all about,
These years so fraught with beauty, sharp
With living, have gone out.

The hot, bright years of youth, so full
Of all the heart desires,
These go so swiftly to their end,
And all too soon the fires

That leaped so joyous in the sun
Die down, are burning low;
Youth's fires are evanescent, fade,
Are done before we know.

McIntyre's New York Day by Day

THE metropolis has a thousand or so cafe entertainers who have never risen above their mediocre niches. In the cheaper places they wait on table and go into their song or dance upon request. Mostly they play to a neighborhood clientele.

Nightly in white coats, they are a-teeter with prop smiles to toss aside their trays and go through a never-changing routine. Usually they receive $35 a month pay but with tips average $30 a week. The most prolific field for their talents is the Yorkville beer hall section of 86th street.

The exceptions to the rule that the singing waiter always remains a singing waiter are notably the talented composer Irving Berlin, who, as Izzy Baline, caroled for the patrons of Nigger Mike Salter's dive in Chinatown, and the irrepressible Jimmy Durante.

In his Coney Island beer joint days Jimmy, with his slouchy walk and gleaming smirk, was regarded as a bit moronic. But he was smart enough to take the same fumiddidles up to Broadway and then out to Hollywood and cash in on it to the tune of several thousands a week.

Printers in Manhattan are the best dressed of the unionized workers. The blowzy tramp of another generation has passed from the scene. Park Row swung with early morning canes in the days when the walking stick was fashionable. And there was one printer, Cope Hyatt—on the old Herald I believe—who used to swank it to the opera in Inverness. Most erudite of the printers is Ben De Casseres, now turning in ponderous editorials. In formative Philadelphia days he was a hand-set printer at the case. In this field he developed his flair for the Fancy Dan words that have made him known and treasured by word beaglers. Few scribblers make the highfaluting phrase so casual and understandable.

One of the most popular debutantes of the season is attractive 17-year-old Esme O'Brien. So striking is her personality that Life picturized her from the cradle to the coming out party in several pages recently. She speaks several languages, plays a variety of musical instruments and trips the lightest fantastic in the local palaces of dance. Her father, Esmond O'Brien, a popular clubman, is also an expert delineator of the modern dance and when he and his daughter glide out on the floor the other customers tip-toe to chairs just for a chance to watch.

A number of clubs no longer drop nor post members for non payment of dues. These include the theatrical as well as the haunts of the Tories. If investigation shows that loss of job or failing dividends are responsible, the victims are permitted enjoyment of privileges just the same. That is all save, of course, a charge account. There are rumors several such organizations are planning to close until skies clear.

The beautiful mother of Helen Menken and Grace Menken Lytell is deaf and dumb as was their father. This parentage is reputedly responsible for the expressive gesturing of both actresses on stage and off. They learned the sign language before they learned to talk. It's most interesting to watch the two daughters carry on an animated conversation with their mother in this mode of expression. Most of the signs, incidentally, are from the Indians and when understood are rare symbols of simplicity.

Editors and writers who know of the handicaps are astounded at the high quality of fiction the deserved dean of American literature, Booth Tarkington is turning out. Several recent stories are considered equal to anything he has done, a record which includes Monsieur Beaucaire, The Gentleman From Indiana, and Penrod, to name a few. He is in his 70's and recuperating from an illness that permits him to sit up only a few hours a day on his Maine porch, coupled with the fact that one eye has collapsed and there's only partial vision in the other.

Philosophy among the waiters. They had occupied a table cooing and billing all evening in a night club and left without a tip. "Youth," grinned the waiter, "must be served!"

COUNCIL GIVEN BUCYRUS CITY DEBT REPORTS

$608,000 Indebtedness In Public Utilities Shown In Auditor's Statement.

BUCYRUS—In a busy session Tuesday night, Bucyrus city council heard annual reports from several city departments, passed emergency measures and considered other measures for future action.

In a report of the public utilities debt City Auditor Clarence Oppenlander reported a grand total debt of $608,000 including the $300,000 water works debt. A total of $45,000 was redeemed during 1937 in the various departments making a reduction in the debt statement from $653,000 last year to $608,000 this year, January 1. The total includes the new $75,000 sewage disposal bond issue.

City Auditor Oppenlander also presented his financial statement of January 1 showing $20,331.46 in the general fund; $3,293.09, water works fund, $2,932.50; hospital fund; $13,518.19 special fund and $73,789.62 sewage disposal fund.

The annual report of the water works prepared by former Superintendent of $79,267.49 and expenditures of $86,068.95, with a cash balance January 1 of $3,293.09. The plant is now in its eleventh year of municipal ownership.

Restores Light Service.

Chief of the emergency measures adopted was a resolution authorizing the service director to restore the city's down town white way lights which were discontinued four years ago as an economy measure. Restoration of the lights will mean an expenditure of $196 a month. Mayor George M. Dustman explained in making the recommendation for restoration of the lights.

An emergency ordinance was also passed by council authorizing the repair of a boiler at the water plant at an expenditure of $570.

A four-year controversy over railroad crossing protection appeared to reach a compromise with the receipt of a communication from the Pennsylvania railroad company offering 24 hour flasher protection on all city crossings with the exception of Sandusky avenue where gate protection for 24 hours a day is offered. The proposition was referred to the utility committee for action at the next meeting.

Council also was given for their consideration a tentative ordinance submitted by the city barbers association regulating the operation of barber shops in Bucyrus. The communication was referred to the ordinance committee for future action. A similar request made of the city council body a year ago was denied.

Upon the recommendation of Mayor Dustman, council authorized the registration of all peddlers operating in the city as a police measure, the registration fee to be set.

City Solicitor John Carroll reported 30 condemnation cases arizing out of the East Mansfield underpass pending January 1 and also several claims filed involving the intercepting sewer. Upon recommendation of the solicitor council authorized the appointment of a claims committee comprised of the members of council to handle all claims. President J. W. Loomis announced that the committee would be appointed at the next regular meeting.

A Farmer's Diary

January 18.

THIS evening was damp and chilly. The wind blew strong from the northeast. Distant sounds, the rumbling train, the bark of a dog, the lowing of cattle—were more distinct than usual. Just before dark I took a short, brisk walk along a country road. On either side the top soil by the ditches heaved like icicles of earth. I stepped on them, and they broke with a crisp sound, like a hammer upon flint.

The bank above the one side had a heavy growth of grass, bitter sweet and honeysuckle vines. All life seemed to have receded, except here and there the hardy green of a wild strawberry leaf, and those leaves on the lower stems of the honeysuckle.

Down the road a little farther, some English sparrows by a neighboring cornshock were doing the hard task of swallowing the large kernels of corn.

A rabbit ran across my path a short distance ahead. I found he made his home beneath the roots of an old locust stump. I judged he was alone, as the dugout was very small. I shoved my hand into that little cell. It was damp and warm. The decayed wood and grass roots mixed with the soil felt as soft as a velvet cushion. I envied the little creature, comfortable and happy in his security, for I was cold and shivered lustily and my home seemed far away.

VOTES TO KEEP 'BLUE LAW' FOR WILLARD INTACT

Council Rejects Request to Repeal Ordinance; Mayor Casts Deciding Ballot.

WILLARD—A discussion of the proposed repeal of Willard's "Blue Law," the ordinance regarding Sunday closing of bowling alleys and pool rooms brought a record attendance of spectators to the meeting of city council.

Favoring repeal of the ordinance were Councilmen L. H. Whisler, William Gullung and Walter Newman. A. L. Bilger, J. H. Garrett and J. D. McMorris opposed a change. Mayor E. L. Wolff cast the deciding vote against repeal.

The bowling alley here has been open each Sunday afternoon from 1 to 6 but when a pool room remained open on Sunday there was a protest and the old ordinance was enforced. The arrest of Vern Allbaugh, proprietor of the bowling alley followed.

In the interest of Memorial library Mrs. R. P. Sharick, vice president of the library board, was present and told of the need of additional space to care for the increasing service and patronage here.

Council voted unanimously to give the library the use of the room adjoining the main library.

Other business at the council meeting included re-appointment of I. N. Duffy as street commissioner, and reading of the report of Municipal hospital for the month of December. There were 58 patients cared for during the month; sales amounted to $2,00.66 and expenses $1,845.13. J. H. Snyder was appointed an honorary member of the fire department. Twenty-five were approved as active members to the department for 1938.

ASHLAND—The action of Melvin McQuate, administrator of the estate of Elmina McQuate, against Maud McQuate and others, has been dismissed in common pleas court here on settlement.

Miss Thiele

"There was a very pronounced murmur of approval among the audience when I announced the use of Birdie Brand Canned Goods, Better Cup of Coffee and White Rose Flour, at Tuesday's and this morning's sessions. So I judge that Mansfield women do not need to be told about the good qualities of these three Mansfield products. But I will say this, I'm amazed at their economy in price."

MANSFIELD SOROSIS STUDIES TWO TOPICS

Mrs. William Gifford, Hostess; "Yaquis" Discussed By Mrs. Paxton: Miss Ruess Talks on Old Needlework Arts.

PAPERS of a widely diversified nature were presented last night at the regular meeting of the Mansfield Sorosis at the Women's Club. Mrs. John Angle, president, was in charge of the meeting and Mrs. William Gifford was hostess.

Mrs. Earl Paxton spoke on "Yaquis, New Indians and the Unburied Patriot of Mexico." This was a description of the history and customs of the people. "As a whole they are a proud tribe of Mexican Indians. Nevertheless, they represent the best rank and file of the army," Mrs. Paxton stated.

These people are only vaguely aware of modern civilization, she indicated. Her paper dealt with Don Jose, the patriot, who was given to all the known vices. She related that in spite of his character he obtained a high government position, but because of his continued malicious practices, was thrown out of office, stabbed by an accomplice, and left to die.

Miss Sophie Ruess presented a paper then on "Old Samplers, Lace and Quilts." This paper considered principally the origin and the different kinds. "The sampler," according to Miss Ruess, "is the greatest antiquated needlework art." The first known sampler was made in Germany about 1610, but it is an art common to all lands. The first American sampler was made by Laura Standish, daughter of Miles Standish.

Ipswich, it was reported, was the home of the early American handicraft of lace making. Contrasting the three types of needlework Miss Ruess said that lace and samplers are in the decorative class, while quilts are a utilitarian art. However, the quilt is more representative of folk art. The paper was concluded with a description of the old-fashioned quilting parties.

The next meeting will be Feb. 1 at the Women's Club with Mrs. A. E. Courtney hostess.

Bridge followed the meeting with prizes being awarded to Miss Grace Crotty and Mrs. Don Hattman. The next regular meeting of the organization will be Feb. 1 at the Mansfield-Leland hotel with Mrs. John C. Sprotsy and Miss Annabelle Strong as hostesses.
